ABOARD SALVAGE SHIP ARTIGLIO, OFF CAPE FINISTERRE, France, Aug. 31.—Lying on gray sand 400 feet beneath the surface of the Atlantic the wreck of the Peninsular and Oriental liner Egypt with $5,000,000 of gold and silver in her hull was identified today by Italian divers.

A waving jungle of seaweed blurred the outlines of the sunken treasure ship, and a cloak of brown vegetation covered the hull; the external fittings were gone and a tangle of splintered wood and broken cables covered the decks. After days of undersea search, however, there could be no doubt that the wreck on the ocean floor was the liner which sank in a collision in 1922, carrying five tons of gold and forty-five tons of silver with it.

Hunted for Six Months.

After six months of heart-breaking search one of the richest wrecks of modern times has been found, and the first stage has been completed of the most difficult piece of marine salvage ever attempted. The sunken vessel is lying upright on her keel among scattered rocks at Lat. 48 degrees 7 minutes N., Long. 5 degrees 30 minutes W., about twenty-five miles southwest of the island of Ushant and thirty miles off Point du Raz. The wreck is one mile from the point fixed by the Swedish captain Hedbach, who searched for it in 1926.

It is almost impossible to see on the bottom, perhaps because the strong tides of the last few days had troubled the waters. At first the divers could not tell whether they were seeing the fore or after part of the ship. In the end it was seven hydraulic cranes, a type which the Egypt carried but which are no longer used on ships, which gave up the ocean's secret. The divers saw the cranes several times and also watertanks, insulators and skylights which corresponded to those on the Egypt's plans.

It was a week ago that the wreck was first located but not until today were the divers certain it was the Egypt. The first descent was made by Alberto Bargellini, youngest of the Artiglio's divers, after a night of thick fog with the fog horns moaning incessantly on a gray green ocean.

Diver Descends in Haste.

When the salvage ship arrived at the buoys the tide was slack and there was no time to lose. In less than half an hour the ship was moored and Signor Bargellini plunged 400 feet to the ocean floor in his steel shell.

On deck his mates crowded around the telephone and watched anxiously as Alberto Gianni, chief diver, put on the headpiece to talk with him.

"How far can you see?" asked Signor Gianni.

"About two yards," was the answer from the ocean floor.

"Can you see anything?"

"No, not yet."

At that moment Signor Bargellini could see nothing but a dim green light all around him. Five minutes before it had been blackness but now his eyes were getting accustomed to the underwater light.

"Touched bottom!" exclaimed the diver far below.

Treasure Ship Is Sighted.

He was hoisted a little and the Artiglio moved to port. A yell came from the telephone.

"What can you see?" asked Signor Gianni.

"How many rails has it?"

"Three; it's a big ship."

On deck there was pandemonium. So this was no rusty green tramp or Spanish orange boat. This was the treasure ship which had been sought for eight years and which experts

Tennessee Feels Earthquake; Building Rock in Wide Area

ROCKWOOD, Tenn., Aug. 31 (AP).—An earth tremor that rocked buildings and rattled windows and dishes, but did no material damage as far as could be learned, occurred here yesterday in an area that covered Roane County. Residents of Lenoir City, near Harriman, report that the tremor was accompanied by a noise like thunder.

Kingston, Harriman, Oliver Springs and Rockwood citizens were awakened by the rocking of the buildings and in some places by the noise. The tremor also was felt in Lenoir City.

HARRIMAN, Tenn., Aug. 31 (AP).—An earthquake rocked Harriman early yesterday. Houses were shaken and in some instances doors were jammed open.

Reserves Are Expected to Reach $2,000,000,000 Before Fall Business Season Starts.

RAPID RECOVERY EXPLAINED

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Aug. 31.—The probability of French gold reserves reaching the amazing total of 50,000,000,000 francs [approximately $2,000,000,000] before the Fall business season starts has again caused the "gold problem" to be the chief preoccupation in the financial quarters.

For the week just concluded the Bank of France's statement showed the stock of gold was increased 242,000,000 francs over the previous seven days, thus bringing the present aggregate to 47,194,608,000 francs. Since nearly all the fast transatlantic liners continue to bring from New York shipments of the precious metal, experts believe the 50,000,000,000-franc mark will be registered before the first frost appears.

One of the clearest and certainly one of the most convincing explanations of why France, only four years ago on the brink of financial disaster, has been able to build this vast wealth of gold has just been disclosed by Pierre Meynal, French economist, who specializes in national balances of accounts.

Disregards Political Aspects.

Disregarding entirely the numerous political aspects of the situation, which foreign financial centres have attributed to those who direct the financial destinies of the country, M. Meynial goes to what he feels to be the heart of the question with the disclosure that the French balance of accounts for the year 1929, the first complete fiscal year since the franc was stabilized at its present value, was equal to 13,150,000,000 francs [about $526,000,000].

These figures are only now available, and the conclusion drawn by the expert is that they show the recovery of France from the moment Raymond Poincaré was called back into power to save the franc has been even more astonishingly successful than hitherto had been realized. The "mystery" of the French gold reserves, therefore, if mystery there is, can in this expert's opinion be clarified by the new figures.

Incidentally, the conclusion is also drawn that the present sound financial, economic and political position of France gives the country the right to regard itself as one of the three great financial centres of the world, sharing the honor with Great Britain and the United States.

M. Meynial interprets his survey in terms easily comprehended by the

APPEAL TO BRITAIN TO KEEP FREE TRADE ISSUED BY BANKERS

COMBATS JULY MANIFESTO

Statement Takes Exception to Assertion That Prosperity Lies in Empire Trade.

WARNS OF TARIFF WARS

Body Also Sees Danger to British Investments Abroad if Duties Cut Countries' Exports.

By CHARLES A. SELDEN.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 31.—A group of 116 British bankers and manufacturers, with a sprinkling of statesmen, will issue tomorrow an urgent appeal that Great Britain adhere to her free-trade system and not be stampeded by the present economic difficulties into adopting a retaliatory protective tariff policy.

This pronouncement is in direct contradiction to resolutions passed on July 4 by a smaller group of London bankers to the effect that England should obtain better trade agreements with the British Dominions and that as a condition for getting such agreements "must retain an open market for all empire products, while being prepared to impose duties on all imports from all other countries."

While disputing the conclusions favoring a tariff put forth by the bankers two months ago, tomorrow's manifesto will reaffirm the international statement issued on Oct. 19, 1926, by bankers and business men of sixteen different countries, including the United States, who declared that the restoration of prosperity was greatly impeded by tariff barriers and that politicians must realize trade should not be considered as a form of warfare, but must be facilitated by greater freedom for commerce among nations.

American Signers in 1926.

The American bankers who signed that statement four years ago were J. P. Morgan, Gates W. McGarrah, Albert N. Wiggin, J. J. Mitchell, Melvin A. Traylor and T. N. Perkins. What those six Americans approved four years ago for the world at large is exactly what this latest appeal from British bankers now calls for. Among the English signers in 1926 were Sir Hugh Bell and Laurence Currie, both of whose names are on tomorrow's list.

But it also is true that two other English bankers, Reginald McKenna and Beaumont Pease, who were among those opposing tariff barriers in 1926, afterward changed their minds so far as England is concerned and put their names to the resolutions last July in favor of duties on foreign imports of this country. Needless to say, none of the July signatories has reversed himself in the brief interval of two months.

The signatures on the latest statement are headed by that of Viscount Grey of Fallodon, an outstanding Asquithian Liberal and long an opponent of David Lloyd George for leadership of the Liberal party. The statement says no adequate reason has been found to justify reversal of the attitude taken by the bankers of the world in 1926 and that four years is too brief a period in which to expect to bring down tariff walls.

It takes sharp exception to the July resolution's assertion that England's prosperity depends primarily on her empire trade and calls atten-

Mukden Seen as Aiding Peking Buffer State; Chang Calls More Troops; Nanking Alarmed

By HALLETT ABEND.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

SHANGHAI, Aug. 31.—Forty-eight hours have elapsed since the movement of Manchurian troops to the Peking-Tientsin area began and Chang Hsueh-liang, Manchurian war lord, has not yet informed the Nanking Government of his intentions. Apprehensions are, therefore, growing in Nanking circles that the Mukden leader is actively and definitely hostile to the Nanking Government.

These fears increased tonight on the arrival of the news that Chang Hsueh-liang had named General Tang Yu-ling to be Governor of Hopei Province and had augmented his movements by mobilizing another division of troops under General Yu Hsueh-liang, who will be appointed to command the Manchurian garrison at Tientsin.

Unofficial reports from Mukden say that Chang Hsueh-liang is busily preparing a manifesto to the Chinese in which he will denounce Chiang Kai-shek, President of the Nanking Government, and insist on immediate peace. It is noteworthy that the intrusion of the Manchurian armies in Hopei Province has not been accompanied by hostilities and has not checked the activities of organizing a Peking Government.

The Mukden move definitely saves Yen Hsi-shan from an impending disastrous defeat because the Nanking Government will not dare to pursue Yen's shattered armies lest such action result in an open conflict with the Manchurians. Chang Hsueh-liang, with 300,000 fresh troops, who are well equipped, with the enormous Mukden arsenal and an undepleted treasury, is most powerful, but it is not believed that he desires a clash with the Nanking armies, preferring to have Yen Hsi-shan head a buffer State separating Mukden's and Nanking's boundaries.

The Changsha situation is perilous. Fresh Communist forces are appearing from the west and the south, the converging Reds outnumbering the government defenders two to one.

Anking, capital of Anhwei Province, on the Yangtse River about 170 miles from the city of Nanking, is under martial law today because of apprehension over the appearance near by of a powerful force of Reds. The Nanking Government is rushing troops on three steamers to the assistance of Anking.

'Legs' Diamond Is Aboard Liner Belgenland Wants to Go to Vichy to "Take Cure," He Says

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 31.—Jack (Legs) Diamond, New York gangster, was on his way to Antwerp aboard the Red Star liner Belgenland tonight after having been warned by Scotland Yard agents that he could not land at Plymouth, England.

With studied casualness, Diamond told his interviewers on shipboard that he intended to go to Vichy "for the cure" and that "all I want to do is to stage a 'fade-out.'" There were signs, however, that he really was not so carefree in his heart. It is expected that trouble with the Belgian police awaits him when he tries to disembark.

"Why, they haven't got anything on me," he said, when awakened this morning. "I don't mind about not landing in England, but I hope I am not going to be stopped from landing anywhere on the Continent. I don't want to be sent back to New York. Maybe I'll go there myself some day, because I have a wife and kiddies at my home in the Catskills.

"In the end I may decide to bring them over here and settle down somewhere, but in the meantime I intend going to Vichy to get the cure. I have stomach and liver trouble and have been told to come here and take the waters."

"I ain't got no house in Brooklyn," he said, "and I ain't got a chauffeur. The chauffeur belongs to my missus, and she sent him to bring Mrs. Witcher over to have a vacation with her in the Catskills. I don't know anything at all about the arsenal."

Diamond spent most of the voyage playing poker over under the name of John Nolan, according to his fellow-passengers on the Belgenland, and he ended the voyage thousands of dollars richer than he started. Women aboard the Belgenland lionized him, and he autographed menu cards, fans and albums with what one passenger described as "the most perfect grace in the world."

"It's these newspapers. All the time they are driving the police to do something, and the police do it. They hold me for a couple days, and all the headlines scream about it. But when they let me go two days later they never say a word about it.

"Of course, I do a bit of bootlegging. It's a business, but I don't want to quarrel with any man, and all this story about my being a sworn enemy of Al Capone is rubbish. I ain't running from nobody. I am just here on a rest cure. I am sick to death of the whole lot of it, and I simply came to Europe to escape it.

"They'll bring anything up against you. That's why I am a worried man. I just want to settle down and be quiet."

DR. BUTLER WARNS OF SOVIET CHALLENGE

Only a Liberalism That Secures Rights of All Can Check Communism, He Says.

FOR SOCIAL REVALUATION

SOUTHAMPTON, L. I., Aug. 31.—In an address here tonight at the Parrish Art Museum, Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University, declared that the existing social and economic order could not ignore the challenge of communism and could meet that challenge only by promoting such a readjustment as would secure the rights of both the individual and the mass of the people. Six hundred persons heard his address.

Only by a revaluation of liberal doctrine in the light of modern economic conditions, a revaluation which must embody the social-mindedness of the Socialist point of view, could the challenge of communism be met successfully, Dr. Butler asserted, as he pleaded for a tolerant and enlightened approach to the question.

The challenge presented to liberalism, which he considered synonymous with capitalism, by "the colossal experiment which is going forward in Russia" requires above all a tolerant and broad-minded approach, said Dr. Butler, pointing out that "tolerance of opposing doctrine and a willingness to hear and to discuss it are essential elements of liberalism itself."

Urges an Objective Viewpoint.

Dr. Butler attributed the difficulty in getting a fair hearing for the Russian experiment to Soviet Russia's "own intolerance, cruelty and well nigh unparalleled fanaticism," but urged, nevertheless, the adoption of an objective viewpoint, if for no other reason than that what is taking place in Russia is bound to exercise a profound influence upon the rest of the world.

He warned the Communists, however, that communism is doomed unless it desists from violence and international agitation. A similar doom awaits liberalism if it proves false to itself, Dr. Butler said.

According to Dr. Butler, the world has come to one of those great turning points when humanity is once more being compelled to reconsider the question which from the beginning of history constituted the very heart of the problem of political and social progress—the question of the rights of the one and of the many.

That question, as it now presents itself, Dr. Butler said, cannot be solved either by pursuing the classic policy of extreme individualism or adopting the communistic program of rigid collectivism. The solution, he indicated, lies somewhere between the two. Both extreme individualism and communism represent in their logical conclusions and consequences a state of class despotism, Dr. Butler said. In seeking to avoid these two extremes, he declared, the liberal should enlist the aid of the social mindedness which marks Socialism as distinguished from communism. The liberal, he said, "need not accept the Socialist doctrine in whole or even in any large part, but he will strengthen his case against the Communist immeasurably if he accepts and acts upon the Socialist point of view."

"We are all Socialists now," said Dr. Butler, quoting the late Marquis

STONES BRACED BY TIMBER

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Aug. 31.—Eight persons are known to have been killed and twenty injured, nine of them seriously, at 7:20 o'clock tonight when the "Texas Special" of the St. Louis-San Francisco Railroad was derailed by a pile of large rocks on the rails at Osage Hills, twelve miles southwest of here.

The de luxe train, westbound for Fort Worth, Dallas and San Antonio, was traveling forty miles an hour when it struck the obstruction, which had been reinforced and braced in place with timbers.

The locomotive and the first three cars, a combination smoker and baggage car, a sealed mail car and a day coach, turned over, the first two being demolished. The remaining nine cars, eight of them Pullmans, left the track.

The cars rolled down an embankment, some of them coming to rest on the eastbound track, which is ten feet below the level of the westbound track at this point.

Engineer Turned Off Oil Flow.

The dead included C. E. Ray, engineer, and Ernest White, fireman, who had the presence of mind to shut off the oil flow in the engine before they were killed, thus preventing a fire.

Other dead included Mr. and Mrs. Charles Newton of Washington, who were on their way to Branson, Mo. Their four-year-old son, Robert, suffered a fractured skull and is in a serious condition at a St. Louis hospital. Several of the dead were pinned in the wreckage.

Immediately after the finding of Dr. John O'Connell, St. Louis County coroner, and railroad officials, that the train had been maliciously derailed, groups of officers began searching the countryside for those responsible for the wreck.

The roadbed was torn up, rails being ripped and twisted and ties hurled about, while the wreck and derailed cars were strewn in grotesque positions on the embankment.

A crowd estimated at 10,000 persons had assembled near the wreck within an hour, according to officers of St. Louis County, who took charge. Firemen from small towns near by began removing the dead and injured as soon as they arrived.

Doctors and nurses from the Frisco Hospital, as well as physicians and nurses from other institutions, were rushed to the scene in ambulances.

Passenger Tells Experience.

A passenger on the train, who refused to give his name, giving his version of the wreck to a newspaper reporter, said:

"I was seated in the rear coach when I felt a sudden shock, and the train was jerked forward in a sickening lurch. There followed another shock and a crash. This was repeated three or four times as the cars ahead jumped the track one by one and piled up.

"Finally the train slowed down and stopped. Everybody in my coach jammed the doors getting out. Outside there was shouting and screaming and confusion as the passengers struggled to get out of the derailed cars or to extricate themselves or others from the wreckage.

"I saw the last five coaches were not derailed, and ran up to the front. One of the first things I saw was a little boy whose feet were caught in the wreckage and who was weep-

SHIP REACHES PORT WITH ANDREE'S BODY; HORN TELLS OF FIND

DISCOVERY WAS ACCIDENTAL

SCIENTISTS AWAIT BODIES

Only Officials Will Be Allowed to View Them—Official Report Is Not Yet Written.

By SVEND ELVESTAD.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

TROMSOE, Norway, Aug. 31.—A blunt-nosed little vessel flying her flag at half-mast came out of the Arctic and anchored today at Hasvik on the bleak coast between North Cape and Tromsoe. She was the ice-cutter Bratvaag coming back to civilization after finding the bodies of Salomon August Andrée and his companions thirty-three years after they had perished on White Island.

On the afterdeck, covered with canvas, lay two human forms—one the body of Andrée and the other his companion, Fraenkel, being brought back for a solemn burial in Sweden.

The whole story was true, after all, despite rumors that no bodies had been found at Andrée's camp and that the grim tale was a fabrication. The first reports were confirmed by Dr. Gunnar Horn, who discovered the tragic relics—confirmed except that the bodies were not in the perfect state of preservation which had been mentioned in the preliminary messages. Dr. Horn's official report, however, is not yet in existence, as he has had no time to write it on the voyage.

After telegraphing briefly to the Svalbard [Spitsbergen] office at Oslo, Dr. Horn was instructed to proceed at once to Skjervoen Island, in order to avoid a possible leak in information.

The Bratvaag took all Norway by surprise when she stopped at Hasvik. No one was there to meet her except a forlorn little group of fishermen who live in four wooden houses at the base of a cliff and endure the rigors of the Arctic climate. A school teacher of the village was the first to meet Dr. Horn as he stepped ashore on the little stone quay at Hasvik Harbor.

Dr. Horn told him that if the Bratvaag had not called by sheer accident at White Island the whole story might never have been told. The bodies would have been left on the ice and the remains of the camp would have been carried away with the melting snows.

A kerosene lamp was the first object which aroused Dr. Horn's curiosity on White Island, according to the story he told the school teacher. When he found a "Made in Sweden" label on it he was first struck with the idea that it might be a relic of Andrée's camp. Soon afterward he saw a leg of Fraenkel protruding from the snow.

Near by was Andrée himself in a sitting posture, reclining a little to the right and facing as if staring at Dr. Horn from sightless eyes. One side of his face was decomposed, but the other was recognizable and lifelike. Officers and crew of the Bratvaag, deeply moved, erected a cairn on the site and then reverently carried the bodies aboard.

Swedish scientists who will examine the bodies arrived at Tromsoe today. They said nobody except officials would be allowed to view the

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Aug. 31.—Dieudonne Coste does not know how to spell his name. He himself admits that he is not certain whether the name should have a final "s," so he "just makes a wiggle at the end."

He thinks it best, however, to spell it without the final sibilant, as this averts mispronunciation in two syllables.

WEATHER IS IDEAL FOR COSTE FLIGHT

Dr. Kimball Says Flier Will Have Unusual Advantage of Winds From East.

WILL RADIO REVISED DATA

Meteorologist Who Has Advised Many Ocean Fliers Sees Rare Chance for Success.

Dr. James H. Kimball, who has been the guiding hand of all the transatlantic fliers with regard to foreknowledge of weather conditions en route, said yesterday that the conditions over the great circle course between Paris and New York would be better in his estimation for the flight westward than any he had seen before. He predicted that Captain Coste and M. Bellonte would have a decided advantage over more than two-thirds of the route and though they would be flying for the most part beneath an overcast sky and spotty rain squalls they may add twenty or more miles an hour to their speed by keeping in the track of following winds.

Dr. Kimball based his predictions on ocean weather charts which showed the tropical storm which passed eastward over Bermuda on Wednesday well out toward the Azores as the centre of a widening area of low pressure. This area rotates in a counter clockwise direction and its periphery extends above the coast of Ireland indicating strong winds from the east to a point almost half way across the ocean from that source.

After leaving the edge of the low pressure area the fliers may expect to run into the southern half of a high pressure area which rotates in the clockwise direction giving them more tail winds almost to the coast of Newfoundland. The proximity to the low area will make the skies in that district spotty, with occasional rains, he said.

As the fliers approach Cape Race the winds will diminish and become quartering breezes from the southeast and south. Over Newfoundland the skies will be overcast and the winds will veer again to the southwest, turning west toward Halifax and again west-northwest as the two men follow their course down the New England coastline to New York.

According to the present plans Dr. Kimball and the aerological section of the Weather Bureau in Washington will chart new ocean maps every four hours while the two men are en route. The conditions shown on these maps will be sent out over the Naval Radio Station at Arlington giving the fliers any additional weather details which may be reported by steamers at sea.

At his home last night Dr. Kimball was elated over the prospects of success in the venture of Captain Coste and announced that he would not be sparing with his labors in keeping the two men accurately informed as they attempt to hurdle the ocean which has claimed so many others before through lack of sufficient advance meteorological data, beginning he said, with Captain Nungesser and

New Jersey Girl Breaks Parachute Record; Drops 3 Miles in Half Hour to Safe Landing

Special to The New York Times.

TETERBORO, N. J., Aug. 31.—Dropping more than three miles, from an altitude indicated on a barograph chart as 17,518 feet, Miss Bernie La Balter, 22 years old, of Paterson, floated to earth from above the airport here today, swinging at the end of her parachute shroudlines to establish a world's record for women parachute jumpers. The official record in the annals of the Fédération Aéronautique Internationale was set at 14,800 feet by a French woman, but this figure was broken unofficially on July 2 last when Mrs. Rita Schoemaker dropped from 16,000 feet above Roosevelt Field, L. I.

In the event today Miss Bernie landed more than two miles away in an open field at Woodring. She quickly gathered and folded her parachute and expressed a desire to repeat the performance tomorrow as part of the Labor Day air circus scheduled for the afternoon.

The plane which carried her aloft took off into a brisk breeze from the northwest and climbed for nearly an hour in wide circles before the woman was seen to leap out far above the broken clouds floating at 10,000 feet. The pilot, William Geihl of the New Standard Flying Service, followed the descent in his plane, making spirals as the great white parachute billowed out and floated slowly earthward. The descent was made in slightly more than half an hour, and as soon as he saw Miss La Balter had landed safely Geihl dove to the field and landed.

Kenneth Lane, an observer for the National Aeronautic Association, which supervises all official records, took a sealed barograph from the cockpit. From the line traced on the chart of the instrument he estimated the altitude at 17,518 feet. Official verification must come from the laboratories of the association, he added, where the barograph was sent for recalibration and conversion to prevailing barometric pressures.

Brought back to the airport in an automobile, the young woman reported a cold trip down to 10,000 feet and said that she had some trouble recovering her breath after the plunge of the first few hundred feet through the rarefied air before the parachute opened. She did not pull the ripcord immediately on getting out, she said, as she wanted to wait until she was sure she had passed any danger of fouling the plane.

COSTE SET TO FLY FOR HERE, BUT FOG DELAYS THE START

French Flier Tunes Up Plane at 5 A. M., When Mist Rolls Up Later and Changes Plans.

STILL HOPES TO GO TODAY

HUGE CROWD AT THE FIELD

Two Fuel Tanks Taken Off as Weather Made Them Appear Unnecessary.

By P. J. PHILIP.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LE BOURGET AIRFIELD, Paris, Monday, Sept. 1.—Dieudonné Coste, who had waited on the air field here from shortly before 5 A. M. until 9 A. M. expecting to start at any moment on a non-stop hop for New York, returned to Paris at the latter hour to get more precise weather reports.

Excellent weather was reported otherwise. The flier still hopes to start some time today.

Plane Carefully Groomed.

Captain Coste arrived at Le Bourget just before 5 A. M. and announced he would start just as soon as everything was ready. He said he hoped to be able to make the crossing in thirty-six hours.

In the night every detail of his crimson Breguet sesqui plane had again been gone over by mechanics with the utmost care. A fresh northeasterly wind, admirably suited for a take-off, was blowing from the far end of the field.

As soon as Captain Coste arrived the motor was put through a twenty-minute test. Only one alteration was made on the plane. Two small extra gasoline tanks, which had been attached to the lower plane, were removed.

The airmen had decided that, with the weather reports so favorable, they would not need the entire 1,500 gallons they had originally ordered and that it would be best to save the weight of the extra tanks.

After the test the plane was put back in the hangar to avoid damage from the heavy dew.

At 5:35 day was just breaking and sufficient daylight for a start was not expected for another half hour.

Captain Coste has the altimeter used by Admiral Richard E. Byrd on his flight in the America in 1927, when he landed in the sea at Ver-sur-Mer after getting lost in a dense fog. The altimeter was recovered recently after being dropped in the sea.

Decision Made at Midnight.

Their long and patient wait for good weather seemed at last to have been rewarded. For many weeks their plane has been ready and twice they have thought that Atlantic conditions would permit a start. But it was not until yesterday at noon that the French meteorological office, where they have been daily visitors for many weeks, gave them word that conditions over the whole Atlantic justified a start.

The favorable conditions which caused Captain Coste to announce he would leave at dawn were confirmed at the French National Weather Bureau at 6:30 o'clock last night. Captain Coste then declared his plan for departure was definite, although threatening thunderclouds were hovering over Paris.

Early in the afternoon Captain Coste piloted his big crimson sesquiplane from the Villacoublay military flying field to Le Bourget, where it was housed in a hangar. There mechanics began a thorough examination of the machine. At about midnight it was rolled down to a corner of the field whence five other planes have made their departures since Captains Charles Nungesser and François Coli were lost in 1927 and all either turned back or disappeared.

1,500-Gallon Fuel Load.

Two tank motor trucks then proceeded with fueling the Question Mark with 5,400 liters (more than 1,350 gallons) of gasoline.

"The Weather Bureau informs me that the situation now is ideal for a flight routed southwest of England, over Southern Ireland," said Captain Coste last night. "Further on I can expect to find conditions which will give me favorable winds as far as the North American coast.

HISCOCK TO DIRECT ALBANY CONVENTION

REPEAL FIGHT IS EXPECTED

HOOVER ALLIES BLAMED

Ward and Tuttle Leading as Candidates for Governor—Latter May Drop Out.

Frank H. Hiscock of Syracuse, former chief judge of the Court of Appeals, has been picked for permanent chairman of the Republican State convention, it was reported yesterday.

With Secretary of State Henry L. Stimson selected for temporary chairman to make the keynote speech, two of the three most important positions in the convention have been filled without controversy. No choice has been made yet for chairman of the committee on resolutions, before which will come the first battle over a prohibition plank, and it is possible that there may be no agreement and that the wet and dry factions, which apparently will be nearly equal in strength, may fight it out for the chairmanship of this important committee at the convention.

The reported agreement upon Secretary Stimson for temporary chairman and Judge Hiscock for permanent chairman will have the result of preventing any clash between the wets and the drys in the organization of the convention. Secretary Stimson holds the highest official position of any New York Republican, and Judge Hiscock until his retirement held the highest judicial position in the State.

Foresee No Protest.

In the view of the party leaders there can be no protest, at least in public, against the selection of either. Under a resolution of the State committee, the selection of the two chairmen was left to a committee consisting of William J. Maier, chairman, and Miss Sarah Schuyler Butler, vice chairman of the Republican State committee, and Charles D. Hilles and Mrs. Ruth Pratt, members of the Republican National Committee.

After the selection of Secretary Stimson for temporary chairman it was agreed that an up-State man must be named for permanent chairman. The suggestion of Judge Hiscock is understood to have met with immediate approval. He is a nephew of the late Senator Frank Hiscock, once a political power in the State. He served as associate and chief judge of the Court of Appeals from 1906 to 1926, when he reached the retirement age of 70.

Although the Republican State Convention at Albany on Sept. 29 and 30 will start harmoniously with the selection of its chairmen, there is no indication that any progress has been made in averting or checking the fight on prohibition, which will be made both in the committee on resolutions and on the floor of the convention.

Repeal Prospects Wane.

The prospect for the adoption of a plan declaring for repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment seem less bright than two weeks ago and some of the leaders of the anti-prohibition forces, admitting the improbability of obtaining a majority of delegates, declare that the repeal movement has been blocked by word from the Hoover Administration at Washington. These wets admit that they are without tangible proof of Washington interference, but regard it as significant that Federal office holders and laeders allied with the Hoover group either have held aloof from those advocating a repeal declaration or have been active in opposing it.

Some of the wets also blame Henry H. Curran, head of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, and former Senator James W. Wadsworth for alleged failure to organize the wets of the State to bring about the election of wet delegates or to bring pressure upon other delegates to the convention. Examination of the list of delegates who will be elected at the primary election on Sept. 16 has proved disappointing to the wets.

There has been criticism of the Curran-Wadsworth leadership for the defection of Meier Steinbrink, Brooklyn leader and former director of the association, and Mr. Curran and Mr. Wadsworth also are charged with having failed to keep the Republican organization of wet up-State cities in line. Instead of virtually solid support from New York City, the wets, it was said, can count now only on the support of the New York County delegates and up-State probably only on the delegates from Rochester and Syracuse, with even this support not certain for a repeal plank.

Contest for Governorship.

The contest for the nomination for Governor, in the opinion of most of the party leaders, has narrowed to United States Attorney Charles H. Tuttle and Attorney General Hamilton Ward of Buffalo, with the probability that Mr. Tuttle's friends may refuse to press for his nomination and the possibility that Mr. Tuttle may decline to be a candidate.

Despite the statement of State Chairman Maier that he was not opposed to the nomination of Mr. Tuttle but was for any one whom the convention might name, the belief continues that Mr. Maier does not desire his nomination. Supreme Court Justice Arthur S. Tompkins of Nyack and Judge Frederick E. Crane of Brooklyn, associate judge of the Court of Appeals, are said to have informed Mr. Maier that they would not be candidates, and State Senator George R. Fearon of Syracuse, who at one time seemed likely to be the candidate of the wets, has done nothing to promote his candidacy.

The friends of Mr. Tuttle believe he is the logical and most available candidate and that he can be nominated if they decide to press for his nomination. The most marked development of the last week has been a growing disinclination on the part of Mr. Tuttle's friends to make a fight for his nomination and a belief that Mr. Tuttle might decline to accept the nomination unless it should come to him without a fight and as the virtually unanimous choice of the convention.

Some of Mr. Tuttle's close friends, it was learned, have advised him not to be a candidate for the nomination this year, on the theory that he would be almost certain of nomination and election in 1932, while election is only a possibility this year. Another factor which is said to be likely to influence Mr. Tuttle not to be a candidate is that he cannot finish investigation of all the leads he has regarding alleged Tammany graft and official corruption before the convention. His nomination for Governor would cause his immediate resignation and the delegation of further investigation to the new United States Attorney. Friends are understood to have advised him to remain in his present office, complete his investigations and wait for 1932.

The extent of the opposition to Mr. Tuttle among persons prominent in the Republican party has been surprising to his friends and is regarded as political and not based on doubt of his availability as a candidate. With an opportunity to make "Tammany graft" a leading issue of the State campaign, even some of the prominent Republicans in this city have been lukewarm toward the movement to nominate Mr. Tuttle. Under-Secretary of the Treasury Ogden L. Mills and Mrs. Pratt have done nothing to further the movement to nominate him, it was said, and up-State members of the so-called Hoover group as well as some allied with the State organization have been against Mr. Tuttle's candidacy.

DRYS ADMIT WETS WILL GAIN SEATS

But Methodist Board Says Congress Election Victories Will Lack 'Real Encouragement.'

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31.—Admission is made in a bulletin issued today by the Methodist Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals that the wets will make some gains in the November Congress elections, but these gains, it is asserted, will not be sufficient to give the wets any real encouragement.

"No doubt the present overwhelming dry majority in Congress will be slightly reduced by the November election," the bulletin says. "In the first place, the majority is probably larger than the sentiment in the various districts would justify.

"The Hoover landslide in 1928 brought into Congress some dry Republicans from districts normally Democratic and where the Democratic party is wet. On the basis of sentiment in the various districts, the drys are probably entitled to a little in excess of two-thirds of the membership of the House and Senate. Their present strength is considerably greater than that.

"The wets have perhaps made some gains in the primaries. * * * Their gains have been almost entirely in 'wet' States. * * * Mr. Morrow is the only man of his type the wets have been able to muster."

REPUBLICANS SEE CUT IN MAJORITIES

WEST SAFELY INSURGENT

Prohibition Split Is Looked Upon as an Aid to Democrats in Illinois and Ohio.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31.—Reduced majorities in the next Senate and House were indicated today in the latest survey made by some of the Republican leaders as preparations are under way to have the Fall campaign in full swing early next month from headquarters in Chicago and New York. The loss of thirty-nine House seats is held probable, with some Senatorial contests in doubt.

The survey suggests that the present economic conditions and the cross-currents resulting from divided views on prohibition are issues working against the Republicans in some sections.

The only section of the country in which the survey is said to have definitely pointed to the return of Republican Senators and members of the House is the area west of the Mississippi River. While a swing away from the conservative wing of the Republican party is noted in this region, which includes part of the Corn and Wheat Belts, the absence of an effective minority party is expected to result in the election of Republicans of insurgent tendencies.

The situation was reported as growing very serious for Republican success in the Illinois and Ohio Senatorial elections. In the former, the activity of the Anti-Saloon League against Mrs. Ruth Hanna McCormick, the Republican nominee, since she declared her intention of adhering to the result of the State referendum on prohibition, has caused the party leaders great concern. Their private reports are to the effect that the drys will place a candidate in the field, and it is feared that this will so divide the Republican vote as to elect former Senator J. Hamilton Lewis, Democrat.

In Ohio, the prohibition issue has set up internal strife. The Democrats have nominated for Senator former Representative Robert J. Bulkley of Cleveland, who has declared for a change in the Eighteenth Amendment, despite silence on the subject by his party's platform and the dry tendencies of his colleague, George White, the nominee for Governor.

The survey shows that Senator Roscoe McCulloch, running for reelection did not command anything like the full support of the Republican party in the primaries. He is a Dry and, according to the survey, is strongly opposed by labor and the negroes for his support of Judge John J. Parker to be a member of the United States Supreme Court.

New Jersey is placed as safely Republican in the survey, while Massachusetts, where indications point to the defeat of William M. Butler for the Republican nomination for the Senate, is among the States which show signs of veering to the Democrats. Kentucky, Rhode Island, West Virginia and Oklahoma are among the States in which the survey indicates that the Democrats will win Senate seats now held by the Republicans. Iowa is counted upon to elect a Republican Senator over the Democratic incumbent, Daniel F. Steck.

Charges of heavy expenditures of money in Colorado and the injection of the Wet issue into the fight by Spencer Penrose, brother of the late Senator Penrose of Pennsylvania, and Clarence C. Hamlin of the Republican National Committee are causing a split in the Republican party there that may result in the election of a Democratic Senator.

REPUBLICAN SEES A PLOT.

C. S. Witwer, Dry, Says Foes of Hoover Seek to Disrupt Party.

Charging that some Republicans who secretly opposed President Hoover in the 1928 campaign were seeking to disrupt the Republican party to aid Tammany, Charles S. Witwer, dry candidate for the Republican nomination for Representative in the Twenty-fourth Congressional District, announced yesterday that he would seek the consent of the party leaders to speak in every Republican club in the district. The district includes Yonkers, Mount Vernon and East Chester in Westchester County and the upper part of the Bronx.

"I stand for Hoover Republicanism as opposed to Tammany Republicanism," Mr. Witwer said, "for the integrity of our national Constitution as opposed to hypocrisy and nullification, for the honest and vigorous enforcement of all law as opposed to grafting, racketeering and gang rule."

NEW DRIVE TO BREAK CHICAGO GANG RULE

Civic Bodies Join to Put Stop to $300,000-a-Week Levy of Capone-Barker Control.

TOY GOLF LATEST RACKET

Attempt to "Organize" 300 Courses Revealed—Plumbers' Union Fights to Maintain Freedom.

CHICAGO, Aug. 31.—Data showing that Chicago and Cook County are paying heavy tribute to five or six of the "public enemies" listed by the Chicago Crime Commission, who have perfected an organization in racketeering, bootlegging and gambling, is being prepared in the offices of the commission, it was made known today.

Concentrated action is planned in which the Crime Commission, the Employers' Association, the so-called Secret Six of the Association of Commerce and perhaps the Better Business Bureau will wage a campaign to break the grip of the racket bosses.

Alphonse Capone is described by the Crime Commission as the "big boss," assisted by his brother, Ralph, with George (Red) Barker in command of thirty-three labor unions, and William (Three-Finger Jack) White, Danny Stanton and Klondike O'Donnell as "major generals." The army of the "black flag" is reported to have overcome all opposition in the racketeering field.

Organized labor is striving desperately to hold its own against the Capone-Barker racketeers, who are alleged to be turning legitimate unions into agencies of plunder, profit and power. President John Coeffield of the International Union of Steamfitters and Plumbers is in Chicago trying to prevent the plumbers' union from becoming the private property of the gang.

Operations of the Racket.

In the operations of the rackets, Capone furnishes the threats of violence or murder, according to the requirements of the occasion, according to reports, and Barker is doing the rest, aided by the lesser lights.

The latest specific racket to come to the attention of the three civic bodies formed to aid in enforcing law and order is a drive to "organize" the miniature golf courses of the city. There are said to be 300 of these courses and the "initiation fee" demanded is $35 with monthly dues of $5.

Only the owners are solicited now, the Crime Commission investigators say, but later the employes are to be herded into a union. The racket bosses believe in having both the employers and employe under control, it was asserted.

The amount of the racketeering profit is suggested by this statement from the Crime Commission:

"Capone has 500 men in his gang. If each of them were to get only $100 a week Capone would need $50,000 a week to pay them, but they get far more than $100 a week.

"Then the 'big shots' have to get theirs by the 'grands,' $2,000 to $5,000 a week. It is a fair estimate that now, in bad times, the gangsters take $300,000 to $500,000 a week from honest citizens through racketeering, booze and gambling."

Control of Theatre Employes.

In stating that Capone and Barker controlled a union of theatre ticket-takers, ushers and treasurers, the commission says:

"Barker put his ushers in at all fights and similar sporting events, charging $5 per usher. Most of those so employed were willing to usher without pay for the opportunity to see the show, but at most Barker paid each only $2, although assessing the promoters $5. He stopped the sale of tickets at the Coliseum at Walter George's boxing show until his men were put to work."

The funds raised by Colonel Robert Isham Randolph, chairman of the Association of Commerce and head of the Secret Six, is expected to be called into use in the forthcoming effort to pry Capone and Barker loose from their positions.

"Barker and Capone now have 5 per cent of the unions in their clutches," said one of the investigators.

Many Documents Damaged in Capital Fire May Be Reclaimed and Records Saved

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31.—An investigation today of the charred and water-soaked records of the Federal Trade Commission, the offices of which were destroyed in a fire which swept the war-time "temporary" building housing it and the Women's and Children's Bureaus of the Department of Labor yesterday, indicated that much of its material may be reclaimed.

All of the papers are soaked and large masses of records have been destroyed or badly damaged, according to Otis B. Johnson, secretary of the commission, who spent the day superintending workmen who opened the steel cases housing the records.

Many of the records of the Labor Department bureaus were saved, as the fire in that end of the building was not so devastating.

One of the trade commissioners stated that any lost records probably could be replaced by the New York firm which was in charge of taking down the records at hearings.

Among papers saved, Mr. Johnson said, are the papers relating to the chain store and power trust investigations, and others concerned with the commission's legal cases. No delay is expected in the commission's work because of the loss of records, although it was explained that much time may be lost in rearranging the files on which its work depends.

The commission probably will be housed in a modern fireproof building henceforth, negotiations having been started for space in the Washington Building, but the Labor Department bureaus have been assigned space in another "temporary" structure.

No monetary estimate has been made of the fire loss.

FISH OF MANY KINDS WIN EXHIBIT PRIZES

Pterophyllum Scalava Eimeke, of Movie Fame, Courts Fancy of Visiting Crowds.

A lot of little fish with big names—almost all indigenous to tropical waters—were glorified in Education Hall at the American Museum of Natural History yesterday afternoon, when the Aquarium Society announced the award of medals to the winners in its three-day exhibition. Virtually every color of fish, from the coal black mollienesia to the muria speci, which was barely discernible because it has a yellow eye, was recognized in the awards—so no fish had cause to feel slighted.

The awards were divided into three classes, with medals given to dealers, advanced fanciers, and novice fish collectors. Two special awards were also made—one to W. Schaumburg of New Orleans for his exhibition of gold platys, and another to H. Worth of Ray City, Ga., for the cutest pigmy sunfish you ever saw. The latter were not quite what their name implied, but they sparkled in the water just the same.

Among the exhibits which attracted unusual attention from yesterday's crowds were those of the Pterophyllum scalava eimeke, the small, crescent-shaped fish with exaggerated fins, which figure so prominently in all tropical submarine moving pictures. Also the Panchax panchax from Goa, Portuguese India, was the cynosure of admiring visitors, as it flashed about in its tank, faster almost than the eye could follow it.

The black mollienesia, which were placed well in several exhibition aquariums, were described as the fish which are used for ridding malaria-infested regions of mosquito larvae. They are small fish, very pugnacious, and native to the southeastern part of the United States. They are shipped now to all parts of the world, however.

Among the winners yesterday were:

Novice Class.

R. FELLOWS—Best collection of fish.
H. POLHEMUS—Best collection of young fish bred by exhibitor.
F. CLARK—Best community tank.
J. ZARGES—Best display tank.
K. DIECKMAN—Best balanced tank.

Advanced Fanciers.

H. ERNST—Best collection.
W. G. HOLBEIN—Best collection of young fish bred by exhibitor.
W. G. HOLBEIN—Best community tank.

Dealers.

BRONXVILLE NURSERIES—Best collection of fish.
J. VERSTEEG, PEGGY PET SHOP, AQUARIUM STOCK CO.—Best displays.

The exhibition will continue today, and this evening the ballot box which has been placed for members to vote their choice of the best exhibit in the show will be opened and a cup, donated by the Bronxville Nurseries, will be awarded to the exhibition which receives the highest vote. W. G. Holbein, president of the society, will preside.

DODGE'S COMPANION NOW OUT OF DANGER

HE CAN'T EXPLAIN TRAGEDY

Inquiry Merely Reveals Dodge Was Driving—Body Arrives in Paris and Will Be Brought Here.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Aug. 31.—The inquiry opened by the French police into the auto accident on the Bordeaux-Bayonne road, in which Marcellus Hartley Dodge Jr. met his death, and his companion, Ralph Applegate of Kansas City, was seriously injured, today revealed little regarding the cause. The accident occurred on Friday at about 3 P. M. on a lonely road a hundred yards outside the small village of Magescq and there were no eyewitnesses.

Mr. Dodge's body reached Paris tonight and will be taken on a liner to the United States for burial after a simple funeral service has been held.

Mr. Applegate, who was transported unconscious to the hospital at Dax, is suffering so badly from shock that it is impossible to obtain any connected information from him. He is believed to be out of danger, but when questioned could only reply that he did not remember what had happened when the automobile struck an oak tree on the roadside. All that has been established by the investigation is that Mr. Dodge himself was at the steering wheel when the crash took place.

Two French motorists, André Dupin and Paul Theau Audin, were first on the scene of the wreck. When they arrived the wrecked car had burst into flames. They halted and at the risk of their lives succeeded in raising up the shattered car and removing both occupants. They hastened to the village and returned with Dr. Destonesse, a country physician, who was only able to pronounce that Mr. Dodge had been instantly killed. He ordered the transfer of Mr. Applegate to Dax, where he was lodged in the clinic of Dr. Riberol.

At this clinic tonight it was stated Mr. Applegate was out of danger and that he had passed a good night. He has a fractured left leg, a deep wound on the right leg and contusions on all parts of the body, but attending physicians believe his condition is not critical. At the same time he has not sufficiently recovered to reply coherently to any questions, though he was able to confirm the identity of himself and his companion.

The manager of the Hotel Crillon at Paris, when he learned of the accident, left for Dax to assume charge of the Dodge funeral arrangements, and the body was embalmed before being transferred to Paris.

P. S. DU PONT ENDORSES HEMPHILL'S CANDIDACY

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 31.—Pierre S. du Pont, chairman of the board of E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. and chairman of the executive committee of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, has endorsed the candidacy of John M. Hemphill, wet Democrat, who will oppose Gifford Pinchot, dry Republican, for Governor of Pennsylvania at the November election.

Although Mr. du Pont is a resident of Delaware, he owns an estate in Chester County, Pa., and points out in a letter of endorsement, written to William Wayne, a direct descendant of Anthony Wayne, and made public here today, that Mr. Hemphill's platform "sounds the keynote of the right of the people to govern themselves."

Mr. du Pont's endorsement was in response to a letter written to him by Mr. Wayne suggesting that he give an estimate of Mr. Hemphill's ability to fill the Governor's chair.

"Mr. Hemphill's platform embodies the sound principles that should govern all parties, offering an uncompromised and definite attitude toward the chief questions for the State and for the country as a whole," Mr. du Pont wrote.

"The platform declares squarely for the right of the people of Pennsylvania and of the United States to express themselves on the question of the repeal in the State and national laws relating to the prohibition of the manufacture, sale and transportation of intoxicating liquors. To ignore or deny this right, as seems the policy of many candidates for office, is an attempt to change the basic principles of our government and to refuse the people the right to govern.

"His understanding of the duty of an administrative officer to serve the people is quite in contrast to that of many candidates (some, alas, in the State of Pennsylvania), who ignore the right of the people to change impractical and un-American laws, merely because these laws now stand on the books and at one time met with a measure of approval before their true character was known."

LIQUOR BAN RULINGS STIR PANAMA PRESS

Verdict Against Shipment From Colon Said to Cut Off That Port From Sea.

"RIGHT OF WAY" AN ISSUE

Second Decision as to Transport Over Canal Zone Roads Brings Demand Law Be Modified.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BALBOA, Aug. 31.—Further complications and a probable diplomatic protest are in prospect as a result of the application of the Volstead act in the Panama Canal Zone, according to comment in the local press today on two decisions rendered by Judge James J. Lenihan in the Canal Zone District Court convicting Panamans of violation of the prohibition law.

One decision, according to the Panama American, denies the city of Colon access to the sea, as it is impossible for vessels with intoxicants aboard to leave Colon without passing through Canal Zone waters, where the mere possession of liquors, except on physicians' prescriptions, is a crime. Title 3 of the Volstead act permits the transportation of liquors through the Canal or over the Panama Railroad, but Judge Lenihan ruled that transportation from Colon to another port of the republic, unless through the Canal, violated the law.

The other case involved the transportation of liquor by automobile from Panama City through the Canal Zone en route to the village of Chilibre in Panama. The defense argued that the application of the Volstead act violated Article 6 of the treaty between the United States and Panama, which gives Panama free use of the roads through the Canal Zone, and pointed out that there was no other way to reach Chilibre from Panama City except through the Canal Zone.

The court ruled in effect that the application of the Volstead act was an exercise of sovereignty granted in the treaty.

Commenting on the decision, The Star Herald in an editorial asserts that the sovereignty of the United States in the Canal Zone is limited by reservation of the right of way over roads in Article 6, and that the right of way was not a privilege granted by the United States, but a right reserved by Panama in granting the United States certain rights for the construction, operation, maintenance and protection of the Panama Canal. Referring to the opinion of Judge Lenihan, the editorial says:

"It settles the question of whether Panama can assert any right of way over the public roads of the Canal Zone in event Congress sees fit to abridge such rights or deny them altogether, and the question is decided in a manner extremely unsatisfactory to Panama.

"Judge Lenihan's opinion is apparently well reasoned and convincing, considered from the purely legalistic point of view in which questions should be considered by courts. Quite possibly, if the case is appealed, it will be confirmed. Our only comment is that, if the opinion correctly represents the law on the subject, then the law needs to be changed.

"As to Panama's right to exercise those rights which she reserved in the treaty, there certainly can be no question. It is little consolation, however, for Panama to know that she possesses a moral right which she is powerless to exercise."

The provisions for transportation of liquors through the Canal Zone under seal were made in the treaty of 1926, which has not been ratified by the Panama National Assembly, and since it is not likely any action will be taken on the treaty, the only relief for Panama is in modification of the Volstead act as applied to the Canal Zone.

LYNCH-RENDT FIGHT SPLITS WOMEN'S PARTY

Mrs. Bunce Predicts Big Feminine Vote for Former and Mrs. McGowan for the Latter.

The primary fight between County Chairman David S. Rendt and Borough President John A. Lynch for the Democratic leadership of Richmond County has caused a cleavage in the women's division of the county committee, it was learned yesterday. Mrs. Irene O'Donovan Rossa McGowan, daughter of the late Irish patriot, who is co-leader with Mr. Rendt and chairman of the women's division, is supporting the Rendt ticket. Mrs. Margaret M. Bunce, secretary of the women's division, has endorsed the Lynch ticket.

Mrs. Bunce predicted nearly 100 per cent of the 12,000 enrolled Democratic women on Staten Island would support the Lynch ticket. "The Borough President has given the people of Staten Island a clean and efficient administration," she said.

Mrs. McGowan predicted that a majority of the Democratic women would support the Rendt ticket as the only regular Democratic ticket in the field.

The Staten Island police made no headway during the day in running down the person who is alleged to have signed the name of Mr. Lynch's secretary to a petition requesting campaign contributions, which was circulated among employes at Borough Hall. Mr. Lynch charged that the circulation of the petition in violation of the law prohibiting solicitation of political contributions from public employes was a "political frame-up," and that he would insist that the person responsible for it be prosecuted. District Attorney Fach said his office was taking no part in the political fight and declared that he would prosecute any complaints that borough employes were being assessed by either faction, if bona fide evidence was presented to him.

Insist on Florida "Plot" Defense.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Aug. 31 (AP).—Fred O. Eberhardt, Frank Ralls and Henry Halsema, charged with an alleged plot to procure the assassination of Governor Doyle E. Carlton, will "oppose any move to dismiss the case against them until the defendants have had an opportunity to tell their story on the witness stand," their counsel announced tonight, contradicting a report that the defense would move for a dismissal at the conclusion of the prosecution's case in the preliminary hearing being held here.

SHIP REACHES PORT WITH ANDREE'S BODY

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

COPENHAGEN, Aug. 31.—A message received here at midnight reports the Bratvaag anchored at Skjervoen Island at 11 o'clock and would proceed to Tromsoe tomorrow.

SKJERVOEN ISLAND, Norway, Aug. 31 (AP).—The sealer Bratvaag, bearing the bodies of the three members of the Andrée polar expedition of 1897, put into the harbor here tonight, instead of proceeding direct to Tromsoe as scheduled.

A ship with correspondents of The Associated Press and the Oslo newspaper Aftenposten aboard, which has been lying in a Norwegian port not far distant, was expected to arrive soon to meet the Bratvaag.

Sends Report to Tromsoe.

TROMSOE, Aug. 31 (AP).—From Hasvik Dr. Horn was able to communicate by wire with Tromsoe and sent the following message today:

"I heard for the first time yesterday that I was ordered back. The bodies of Andrée, Strindberg and Fraenkel are well preserved. We are now heading toward Tromsoe."

Later a telegram was received from an official at Hasvik saying:

"The Bratvaag arrived at Hasvik at 2:30 P. M. She was met by several boats and cleared at 4:20 for Tromsoe, expecting to be there in [illegible] or eleven hours."

Journalistic Race Starts.

[illegible] word of the Bratvaag's re[illegible] to civilization there began a [illegible] for news and pictures such [illegible] rarely has seen. By [illegible] and ship, reporters and photographers of many nations prepared to head out into the Arctic and meet the Bratvaag, each intent on being the first to obtain the great story of the Andrée Expedition's fate and of Dr. Horn's extraordinary discovery of the bodies and equipment buried in the ice of White Island.

Among the journalistic adventures was the famous Norwegian aviatrix, Gidsken Jacobsen, who left by plane this morning with her fiancé, the Finnish flier Leppainen. They left for Honningsvaag, whence they planned to fly further in the hope of meeting the Bratvaag. Perhaps unfortunately for them, they got away before the Bratvaag's whereabouts had been reported.

Two other airplanes were here with newspaper parties ready to take off when the ship drew near, and still more were expected. In addition, several sealers put out with news gatherers and camera men.

Scientists Await Bodies.

Several Swedish and Norwegian scientists were here tonight to take charge of the preservation of the bodies after they reach port. They are equipped with refrigerating equipment, and may embalm the bodies here.

Ebbe Andrée, brother of the dead explorer, and Tore Strindberg, a sculptor, who is the brother of Nils Strindberg, another victim of the Andrée expedition, arrived from Sweden today to represent their families. Mr. Strindberg said his people would not claim any of the things found on White Island except possibly those of a very private nature, such as letters. He added:

"My brother was engaged when he flew in 1897, and his fiancée is still alive."

This is a point which had not been cleared up here before.

A grim little scene was enacted when three zinc-lined oaken chests arrived in the ice dock to receive the bodies of the men who have been sleeping in ice for thirty-three years. A great crowd gathered but watched in silence, as is the custom of the northern seafarers.

Scientists here expressed the hope that Andrée's diary and log will still be legible. They say that these frozen records present a great problem and that they must experiment before learning whether the written evidence can be reproduced.

Three Bodies Aboard.

HAMMERFEST, Norway, Aug. 31 (AP).—Dr. Horn today cleared up the question of how many bodies of the Andrée expedition were aboard the Bratvaag, telling The Associated Press he had the bodies of all three who made the 1897 expedition.

The interview was conducted by telephone between Hammerfest and Hasvick, where the Bratvaag touched en route to Tromsoe, and was the first statement Dr. Horn had made for the press about his sensational discovery on White Island.

"We have three bodies with us," he said, adding that Andrée's body seemed well preserved.

Dr. Horn said it was only last night that he had received a radio message ordering him home, and it was difficult to make it out on his receiving set. He was asked whether he had met any of the newspaper expeditions out looking for him, and replied:

"No, you are the first journalist to take a message from us."

Questioned about whether he had brought everything he had found from the Andrée expedition, Dr. Horn answered.

"Yes, and Andrée's body seems very well preserved. Everything we found we placed on the afterdeck. The bodies are lying in cases with ice packed well about them."

Dr. Horn said he had brought Andrée's canvas boat, adding that "it was hard work to get the boat out of the ice. We have done our very best to take good care of everything."

Asked whether he thought it possible that the missing members of General Umberto Nobile's Italia party might be found, Dr. Horn said:

"It seems to me quite improbable. The melting of ice this year has been very great and I think the Italia party has gone to the bottom of the sea as a result."

The explorer added a touch of humor by remarking that he had several live polar bears aboard the Bratvaag and "they are making a terrible spectacle."

Discovery Made Early in August.

OSLO, Norway, Aug. 31 (AP).—Early in the month the Bratvaag, carrying an exploration group headed by Dr. Horn, discovered the bodies of Andrée and his companions on White Island, a little known region in the Arctic seas. Dr. Horn sent word of the find back to civilization by Captain Gustav Jensen, captain of the sealer Terningen, and the world was astounded at the solution of the thirty-three-year-old mystery of the Arctic. It was in 1897 that Andrée and his companions set out in a balloon toward the North Pole, and the Arctic silence soon swallowed them.

After sending back word of the discovery, the Bratvaag went about her business of gathering seals. It was then that a race set in to bring the little vessel back to the paths of communication and thus obtain a complete story. Numerous messages were broadcast to the Bratvaag, but it was not known whether she received them, for she carried a radio receiving apparatus, but no transmitting equipment.

No Official Report Made Yet.

The Bratvaag stopped at Hasvick only fifteen minutes to telegraph the authorities of her return. It was stated that Dr. Horn had not had time to make an official report of the discovery.

The Spitzbergen Scientific Mission, backer of the Horn expedition, today gave The Associated Press a letter from Dr. Horn telling of the discovery. It was sent from the Bratvaag through Captain Jensen. Part of the letter is private, but the remainder is as follows:

"East of Victoria Island, 8/7.

"We have today met the Terningen of Tromsoe, and as she will surely reach home before us, I am sending a short account of the expedition with this boat.

"We have had fine weather all the time from Tromsoe, although there was a little fog in the west. We went into Hopen and from there to Abel Island. We continued to Great Island, where we built a hut in the neighborhood of the depot established there by the Italians. From there we went to White Island.

"In its southwestern part it is quite bare, and it is there that we found Andrée's camp.

"The camp was first discovered by a company of our crew. Shortly afterward we arrived on the spot.

"I am sending all further information about the find to British Consul Saether, who will wire the message to the Spitsbergen office. We have sailed all the time in ice-free waters.

"We are now lying east of Victoria Island. All is well. I shall be back again by the beginning of September.

"With greetings,
"GUNNAR HORN."

Thinks Balloon Will Be Found.

Belief that Andrée's balloon and other relics of his expedition will be found on White Island was expressed to The Associated Press here by Captain Thorvald Grodahl, who arrived this morning in his ship Hanseat after a fruitless search for the long-missing members of Nobile's Italia airship expedition to the North Pole.

Grodahl was on White Island just before Dr. Horn had found a few remains of some expedition in the form of a tin can, some paper and a tent fastening. However, he saw nothing of the bodies which Dr. Horn found shortly afterward, and indeed thoughts of Andrée never entered his mind.

"This year it has been exceptionally easy to penetrate the Far North," he said. "There is no doubt that it will be possible to find more things when the snow melts."

Asked whether he thought Andrée and his companions lived a long time after their balloon was lost, Grodahl replied:

"I think they lived quite a while and that they froze to death just as they were found. I feel sure that they slept themselves into death."

PERU REORGANIZING DIPLOMATIC CORPS

ONE FACES INVESTIGATION

LIMA, Peru, Aug. 31 (AP).—Peru's new military government, beginning its second week under Lieut. Col. Luis M. Sánchez Cerro, began making over the Peruvian diplomatic service today.

The government announced that it was quite satisfied with the services of Manuel Freyre y Santander, the Ambassador at Washington, and would retain him in that post. But the Minister to France, Mariano Cornejo, was less fortunate. He was ordered to deliver the legation to the secretary and then come to Lima for investigation of his conduct. Francisco Garcia Calderon, noted writer and philosopher, will succeed Señor Cornejo.

Eleodoro Romero will remain as Ambassador to the Holy See. The government accepted the resignations of the Minister to Spain, Eduardo Leguia, brother of the deposed President; Alejandro Puente, Minister to Great Britain; Cesar Canevaro, Minister at Vienna, and Guillermo Swayne Mendoza, another relative of Señor Leguia, Minister at Brussels.

The consular service also will be changed, with Major Alfredo Henriod appointed consul general at New York to succeed Dimetrio Correa Olavegoya, who has been appointed consul general at Hamburg instead of Rodolfo Rixrath. Ismael Escurra will go to Paris as consul general, succeeding Carlos Valverde, dismissed.

In the domestic field Fernando Gazzani was appointed legal adviser to the Foreign Office; Enrique Carrillo, a writer, was named Under-Secretary ad interim.

Meanwhile, Augusto B. Leguia, the former President, remained aboard the cruiser Almirante Grau in Callao harbor. Local newspapers were informed by their Callao correspondents Saturday that Señor Leguia and his son had been transferred to the political prison on San Lorenzo Island, but it was later learned that Señor Leguia was not moved because of the state of his health. Dr. McCormack, an American physician, signed a certificate saying that he should not be transferred at present.

It was reliably learned today that the Junta is negotiating with the Reserve Bank of Peru for an internal loan of fifteen million soles (about $6,000,000) in order to meet immediate obligations. Local banks are reported backing the Junta's request.

A strong earth shock at 8:30 o'clock this morning added to the excitement caused by the recent change of government.

The tremor lasted about fifteen seconds and many inhabitants fled to open places in panic. There was no damage.

WOMAN AUTO DRIVER HELD.

Arrested on Intoxication Charge After Car Hits Tree on the Drive.

Mrs. Margaret King, 30 years old, of 242 West Seventy-sixth Street, who described herself as a short-story writer, drove an automobile against a tree on Riverside Drive at 111th Street early yesterday morning and was arrested on a charge of driving an automobile while intoxicated. She was arraigned before Magistrate Burke in West Side Court and held in $500 bail for a hearing on Sept. 4.

The arrest was made on complaint of Alexander Kahn of 400 Riverside Drive, who charged that his life had been endangered by Mrs. King's driving just before the automobile struck the tree.

John E. Thomas, a druggist, of 1,321 Madison Avenue, is the owner of the wrecked car and was a passenger in it. Two summonses were served on him, one for permitting Mrs. King, who had no license, to operate his car, and the second for the destruction of city property. Both Mrs. King and Thomas were thrown from the automobile, but neither was hurt.

FIGHT FOR TWO LIVES HIGH ON MT. WHITNEY

Doctor and Nurse, With Supplies Dropped by Plane, Attend Badly Injured Youths.

INDEPENDENCE, Cal., Aug. 31 (AP).—Isolated at the 13,000-foot level on Mount Whitney, in a rough cabin serving as a hospital, two of four youths injured six days ago by an avalanche fought a desperate battle tonight for their lives.

Donald Downs of Glendale, Cal., and Ed Jordan of Dinuba, Cal., were too ill to be moved when their injured companions, Donald Griffin and Robert Rankin, both of Fresno, were brought here from the Forest Trail camp yesterday.

A physician and a nurse who made the thirty-five-mile journey on foot up the tallest peak in the United States to care for the injured, sent an urgent call for additional medical supplies. An army plane from March Field, Riverside, flew to Lone Pine today bringing the medicine. Later it flew over the camp, dropping the supplies at the door of the improvised hospital.

Downs's arm was injured by the falling rock, and it was amputated below the elbow. Blood poisoning set in, and the supplies taken to the camp today were for a second operation. Jordan's ribs were broken and he has developed pneumonia. Griffin and Rankin were taken to Fresno by airplane yesterday.

The youths, working on a Sequoia National Forest trail crew, sought refuge beneath a cliff while other workers set off a dynamite blast. The blast sent rocks tumbling down upon them.

UPSETS WIFE'S BOAT; SAVES HER FROM FALLS

LOWELL, Mass., Aug. 31 (AP).—Marshall Eldridge of Boston, holder of the national speed record for outboard boats, furnished spectators at a motor-boat regatta here today an exhibition of speed, skill and heroism in rescuing his wife from almost certain death in Pawtucket Falls.

Mrs. Eldridge was trying out one of her husband's speedboats on the Merrimack River and was headed for the falls at a forty-mile-an-hour clip. Mr. Eldridge, who was a short distance behind her in another boat, suddenly saw where she was headed. He put on more speed, crossed in the path of his wife's boat, capsizing it about fifteen feet from the falls, which drop thirty feet to a bed of jagged rocks. He then pulled Mrs. Eldridge from the water and took her to shore, none the worse for her experience.

HUNT LEGISLATOR'S WIFE.

Soldiers Join Police in Altoona (Pa.) Search for Mrs. F. A. Bell.

ALTOONA, Pa., Aug. 31 (AP).—Intensive search of Altoona and vicinity today failed to reveal any trace of Mrs. Elsie Bell, aged 64, wife of Fred A. Bell, Assemblyman from this district. The woman has been missing since she left her home yesterday morning.

Woods were searched in vain by groups composed of National Guardsmen, State highway patrolmen, State police, county and city officers and Boy Scouts. A lake at Lakewood Park was dragged without result.

Mrs. Bell had no money in her possession, as far as is known, when she left home. She was said to have been in perfect health.

COSTE SET TO FLY FOR HERE AT DAWN

By P. J. PHILIP.

sufficiently dry to permit a take-off, I do not care what the conditions are. The thing I am anxious to avoid is a situation such as I encountered last year when, after leaving Paris, I encountered head-winds that put me hours behind my flying schedule. If I can make the first half of the Atlantic on scheduled time I will be relieved of fuel worries, which will mean everything on this flight.

"I have every confidence in my machine. If any plane can make the east-west flight to New York, I am satisfied it can. More than ninety hours of test flights have been made in order to have the material the very best that modern construction affords and everything connected with our plane, motor and its equipment has been made to conform with opinions I have formed through three years of concentrated study of this project."

Bellonte Also Confident

M. Bellonte, who will act as navigator and radio operator, quietly assented to Captain Coste's statement.

"I am ready to go with Captain Coste at any time he says," declared M. Bellonte.

After the fliers had taken the Question Mark from Villacoublay to Le Bourget for fuelling Captain Coste and M. Bellonte both returned to their homes for some rest. Captain Coste, as is his custom, had a party of intimate friends to dinner at his apartment in Passy and, although the talk was necessarily all about today's early start, he himself refused to join in except jocularly. At 9 o'clock he bade all his friends good night, unhooked his telephone and went to bed.

"Go and do the same," he told his friends.

He gave instructions that he be awakened at 3 o'clock and for his automobile to be at the door of his apartment, ready to take him to Le Bourget.

M. Bellonte, whose wife is English, dined with her and their baby girl, and also prepared for a few hours of sleep.

Last evening's meteorological report completely confirmed that which had been given to the airmen at noon. They proposed to follow the Seine Valley to the French coast, taking a line which would thereafter cross the English Channel well to the west, pass over the Devon Peninsula and cross Southwestern Ireland. They would, according to last evening's plans, have left the Irish coast somewhat north of the mouth of the Shannon.

By taking this route they would have avoided a depression off the west coast of France and enter what is believed to be a highly favorable zone. There is an anticyclone over the whole Atlantic area from there to the American coast, with probably light easterly winds over most of the route.

Wife With Coste at Field.

LE BOURGET, France, Monday, Sept. 1 (AP).—Captain Dieudonné Coste, ready for the start of his transatlantic flight to New York, began tuning up and testing the engines of his airplane shortly after 5 A. M. today [12 midnight on Sunday in New York].

He arrived at the field accompanied by his wife and without further ceremony sprang into the pilot's seat for the test.

Captain Coste and Mr. Bellonte had their larder stocked with the following provisions: Three cold chickens, one pound of sugar, four bottles of Vichy water, three bottles of champagne, two vacuum bottles of coffee and a quantity of dry toast.

For use in event of minor injuries they took a first aid package containing iodine, aspirin, quinine and gauze for bandages.

These preparations are about the most minute and careful ever made by fliers starting across the Atlantic from Le Bourget.

Aviator Rises at 2 A. M.

A great crowd swarmed out of Paris by the Flanders Road to Le Bourget as the hour for the take-off approached.

Extremely severe traffic rules were enforced at the airport by a large body of soldiers and police as Captain Coste's airplane was wheeled out from the hangar to the field.

The two main tanks in the fuselage of the Question Mark and seven smaller ones built into the wings were being pumped full with about 1,350 gallons of gasoline. Two emergency tanks remained attached but probably will be removed. Captain Coste planned to use them only if he expected heavy going. On 1,350 gallons of gasoline he flew approximately 5,000 miles in making his long-distance flight record in the Question Mark last year.

DEFAULTS DOUBTED ON PERUVIAN LOANS

Bankers Here Seek to Reassure Investors in Argentine and Brazilian Bonds Also.

REPUDIATION HELD RARE

Dr. Winkler Says It Is Seldom or Never Used and Points Out Our Large Interests in Peru.

The weakness displayed by Peruvian and subsequently Argentine and Brazilian Government and municipal bonds as a result of the overthrow of the Leguia Government in Peru and the threatened revolts in Argentina and Brazil is said to reflect apprehension on the part of American investors concerning the continuance of debt service. On this score investment bankers here have hastened to answer all inquiries that governmental changes do not necessarily alter the status of a country's credit standing.

The drop in Peruvian issues at the beginning of last week was followed a few days later by sizable rallies. The decline in the Argentine and Brazilian issues took place on Friday, so that with the holiday on Saturday and today on the Stock Exchange prices on these issues remain at the lows.

Dr. Max Winkler, vice president of Bertron, Griscom & Co., Inc., in a statement issued yesterday, said repudiation of debts and defaults were rarely, if ever, resorted to by new Latin-American governments.

"On the contrary," he said, "it is reliably reported that in the 1890s the fiscal agents for a certain South American issue received funds covering interest and sinking funds from both the overthrown administration and the incoming government."

In the case of Peru, which suffered from political changes last week, Dr. Winkler said the apprehension on the part of American investors concerning the continuance of the debt service was groundless. He declared that with more than $215,000,000 invested in Peru by Americans and with American-Peruvian commerce amounting to more than $56,000,000 annually, our interest in recent events in the country is more than academic.

"Of the United States investments in Peru," he said, "investments in petroleum and mining enterprises aggregate $110,524,000, or approximately 50 per cent of the total. Investments in government, State and municipal obligations amount to $98,661,000, while the balance is made up of miscellaneous investments, of which the largest item is represented by our interest in the Peruvian Telephone Company. Control of this company was acquired last year through the purchase of stock by the International Telephone and Telegraph Corporation. The amount is placed at $2,880,000."

American loans to the Peruvian Government and municipalities outstanding are as follow: $49,492,500 Peru 6s, due in 1960; $25,000,000 Peru 6s, due in 1961; $14,779,000 7s, due in 1959; $5,000,000 Peru credit of 1929; $1,389,500 City of Callao (Peru) 7½s, due in 1944, and $3,000,000 City of Lima (Peru) 6½s, due in 1958.

IRIGOYEN REPORTED ANNOYED AT DISPLAY

ARMY OFFICERS ARE FREED

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BUENOS AIRES, Aug. 31.—President Irigoyen is said to be greatly displeased with the severity of the military and naval precautions taken in the last few days to protect him and the government from a rumored military rising, and it is felt that his criticism of the Minister of War is likely to lead to General Dellepiane's resignation from the Cabinet.

When Cabinet officers submitted to President Irigoyen early in the week whatever information it was which led them to fear a disturbance of public order, the President is reported to have told his Ministers to take what measures they thought necessary. They surrounded the government buildings with strong military guards, armed them with machine guns and brought three destroyers to Buenos Aires to join four gunboats already in the harbor. They brought two cruisers from Bahia Blanca to La Plata, which is one hour from Buenos Aires.

These measures and the secrecy attending them spread alarm among the public, causing alarming reports to be cabled abroad, which seriously affected Argentine exchange and quotations of Argentine bonds on foreign stock exchanges.

Six Auto Loads of Guards.

The party politicians insisted on forming a veritable procession to accompany the President to and from the Executive offices, four automobiles crowded with armed men preceding his car and four following.

The President's annoyance is reported to have reached a high pitch on Thursday night when he learned that several prominent army officers had been arrested and confined in barracks under armed guards, apparently for no other reason than that they were friends of the former Minister of War, Señor Justo, who is known to be unfriendly to Señor Irigoyen. When the President learned of the arrests he ordered the immediate release of the officers, thus creating an incident which, it is said, makes Dellepiane's situation in the Cabinet impossible.

The President is said to have placed little credence in the rumors of rebellion from the first and to have expressed the opinion that the only thing that might happen might be another attempt to assassinate him. He is said to feel that he could have been properly protected from such a contingency without the alarming display of troops.

Saturday was a holiday and today a miserably cold and rainy Sunday, so there has been little activity in the business district and there has been a slight loosening of military precautions.

An order canceling leaves of absence of army and police officers was lifted and Sunday passes were granted to several, but the troops are still confined to barracks.

Hecklers Rout Minister.

BUENOS AIRES, Aug. 31 (AP).—A demonstration at the Cattle Exposition this afternoon against Juan Fleitas, Minister of Agriculture, and President Irigoyen caused the Minister to leave the building and the postponement of the exhibition.

As Señor Fleitas entered the building to open the first program, a crowd outside shouted "Down with the government!" and those inside began booing and whistling when the Minister attempted to speak. It continued as long as he stood on the platform and finally he was forced to leave the hall, escorted by firemen.

Meanwhile, anti-Irigoyen pamphlets were distributed through the crowd. They were signed by the "Legion de Mayo" (May 25 is the Argentine Independence Day). This is an organization formed by a discontented faction including Videla Dorna, whose recent election as a Deputy was not recognized by the government.

Meanwhile, the government continued the strong military guard about the Presidential Palace and in other strategic locations, following the reported unrest of last week, and made plans for the opening of Congress this week.

Under the revision of credentials it is understood that the Chamber will have 99 Irigoyenist Deputies and 53 in the Opposition, including 25 Conservatives, 14 Independent Socialists, 8 anti-Irigoyenists and 6 of other groups.

The Senate will have 7 Irigoyenists, 18 Direct Oppositionists and 5 others.

Police believe that the demonstration was directed principally against President Irigoyen, who, as is customary, had promised to attend, but sent Señor Fleitas as his representative at the last minute.

The demonstration was a particularly noisy affair. Officials of the Sociedad Rural attempted strenuously to calm the crowd and Señor Fleitas even jumped on a chair to make himself heard, but the crowd hooted, hissed and whistled until the Minister had left.

Then the demonstrators gleefully shouted "He's gone! He's gone!" for several minutes.

Provincial Paper Bombed.

CORDOBA, Argentina, Aug. 31 (AP).—A bomb exploded today on the front porch of the newspaper named the Principles and did some property damage.

Authorities attributed the incident to a campaign by the newspaper against extremist elements and in favor of religious education in the schools.

BAY STATE AUTOS KILL 100.

Registrar Lays Most of August Toll to Drunken Drivers.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Aug. 31.—Nearly 100 men, women and children were killed on the highways of Massachusetts in the month of August and in the past week up to Friday midnight twenty-four persons were killed, four more than a year ago.

Aroused by the fatality record, George A. Parker, registrar of motor vehicles, declared tonight that appeals to motorists seemed to have no effect, that liquor was a major cause for many accidents, and that it was becoming a custom for wedding and birthday parties to end with death and injury on the highways.

"As long as drinking drivers have no fear of the consequences of their acts," he said, "there will be no reduction in accidents."

He is convinced that to drive the "killers" from the highways the law must be rigidly enforced.

Idol 33 Feet High Discovered in Mexico by Hindu Scientist

By The Associated Press.

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 31.—What is alleged to be the largest idol ever found in America was discovered today near Tecoco, forty miles from Mexico City, by a Hindu archaeologist, Pandurang Khankloje. It is thirty-three feet high and is supposed to date back to pre-Aztec times.

Its existence is said to have been known in the days of Porfirio Diaz, President of Mexico in 1877-80, and again in 1884-1911, although no books mentioned it.

The stone idol represents the Goddess of Water and is called Chalcutlique. It has a thickness of twenty feet and is fantastically carved. Traces of the original green paint which ornamented the head are still visible.

The ancient image will probably have to lie in the deep ditch where it was found because it would be necessary to build a railroad to haul it out.

DOGS BAR RESCUERS FROM INJURED WOMAN

For four hours yesterday two German police dogs stood guard over Mrs. Sarah Lacey, 70 years old, as she lay injured in the rear yard at 99 Madison Street, Brooklyn, and refused to let neighbors and the police go to her aid. An emergency squad finally out-manoeuvred the animals.

Mrs. Lacey is caretaker at the Madison Street address for John E. Kinney, but the family was not at home yesterday. Whether Mrs. Lacey tripped in the yard or fell from a window was not learned. Neighbors looking from near-by windows saw her lying on the ground with the two animals anxiously pacing around her.

Various methods of approach were attempted, but each time the neighbors were driven back by the dogs, which were apparently aware of Mrs. Lacey's helplessness and feared she might be harmed. Offers of bait, kind words, and the use of sticks and stones were of no use.

Finally some one called Patrolman Gorman, but the dogs forced him back, too. He drew his revolver, intending to shoot the animals, but he was warned that they were valuable, so he summoned Police Emergency Squad 16.

Sergeant J. J. Murphy, head of the squad, emptied his revolver into the air and the dogs backed into a far corner of the yard. Two patrolmen, armed with boat hooks, then went in and kept the dogs at bay while three of their comrades carried Mrs. Lacey into the house. She was then taken to St. John's Hospital, where it was found that she was internally injured.

SUICIDE AN EMBEZZLER.

John Fischer, Bank Teller, Had Laid Act to Brother's Arrest.

John Fischer, president of the United States Savings Bank of Newark, has revealed that William T. Serbe, chief teller, who committed suicide Friday, was alleged to have been appropriating bank funds to his own uses for a considerable period, according to The Associated Press.

Serbe left a note saying he was "ashamed his brother was arrested and sued so many times." The brother, Fred, of Amplewood, president of a trucking firm, is under bail, charged with conspiracy to conceal assets in bankruptcy.

Fred Serbe yesterday said: "William called me in last Wednesday and told me he was short at the bank. He asked me what I could do for him. I told him I could do nothing. I had no means.

"He gave me no hint of suicide. When I read that he had attributed his act to shame over my supposed conduct, I did not know what to say. But I can understand and I guess it's all right. He was trying to cover up for his family. He thought it wouldn't have been so hard on me—I have only two children. I can't blame him."

Mr. Fischer said the bank was fully insured against any losses should they occur.

Coli, whose tragic end shook the French nation to the point that it has refused to sanction other attempts and has heretofore left such men as Captain Coste dependent on the weather services of the United States, other nations and the ships at sea for vital information.

COSTE TO USE RADIO TO CHART HIS COURSE

Flier Will Find His Position by Determining on Map Lines of Direction to Two Ships.

Captain Coste's plane is equipped with a radio apparatus operating on a 600-meter wave-length with a range up to several hundred miles. His call letters are F-R-A-N-S, and M. Bellonte will endeavor to keep in close touch with ships at sea on or near the route.

Detailed weather reports from the Naval Observatory at Arlington will be relayed through the nearest ship to the flying plane every four hours. No messages other than requests for radio compass bearings are expected to emanate from the plane.

The procedure of getting such bearings is novel. Taking its estimated position as shown by celestial observation and charting, the plane sends out continuous signals to ships. The radio operators on shipboard train direction-finding loops on the signals and send back the exact direction shown to the plane with the precise location of the surface ship at the time of reception. By getting answers from two ships in different positions the fliers will be able to check their position by simple triangulation.

WOULD RUN DO-X ON BERMUDA LINE

OTHER ROUTES ATTRACTIVE

New York-Miami, Part of New York-Buenos Aires, Great Lakes and Pacific Coast Suggested.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

FRIEDRICHSHAFEN, Germany, Aug. 31.—One of the routes most perfectly adapted to profitable operation of a flying boat of the size of the Dornier DO-X, with its seats for seventy passengers, is between New York and Bermuda, in the opinion of Lieutenant C. H. Schildhauer, the American pilot who will share the duties of steering the DO-X to New York next month.

Figures indicate that on the average 100 persons daily make the trip each way on that stretch, and the number varies but little in Summer and Winter. The DO-X would require about six or seven hours to make the flight comfortably and could leave New York at 9 A. M. and arrive in Bermuda between 4 and 5 in the afternoon, allowing for the change in time. It would be possible to take the full complement of passengers and a crew of ten with reserve gasoline for an extra three hours at approximately a ton an hour.

Lieutenant Schildhauer is convinced there would be a steady demand for places on this route, which would be favored by the well-to-do, many of whom, snatching a short holiday, would be anxious to save as much time as possible en route.

New York to Miami.

New York to Miami is another route where it is believed the operation of the giant flying boat would prove economic. This is calculated to be a ten to eleven hour flight, which would be close to the margin of profitable flying for the DO-X. Gasoline for fourteen hours would probably cut down the passengers to about fifty, necessitating a slightly higher fare per mile.

It is believed that the DO-X would be also likely to justify her use in cooperation with land planes over part of the New York-Buenos Aires run. The shortest great circle route from New York to the northwest point of South America leads over Bermuda and the eastern edge of the West Indies, and a three-stage hop to South America, where connection could be made with land planes going on to Rio de Janeiro and Buenos Aires, should prove profitable.

On the Pacific Coast, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle seem to offer eventual possibilities, while several Great Lakes hops, such as from Buffalo or Cleveland, ought to bring in profits for the operators.

On the other hand, a service from Miami or New Orleans to the Panama Canal now seems to offer little attraction, owing to lack of urgent traffic. Miami to Havana is considered too short, and it is believed it would be better to run two or three smaller planes than to try to make the DO-X pay for herself on such a short flight.

European Possibilities.

There are several European stretches which offer inducements for the DO-X. The best of these is probably Marseilles to Alexandria by way of Messina. It is believed that a sufficient portion of the ship traffic bound to India and the Far East which already takes the train to Marseilles en route from London at a saving of some five days would be glad to add another two or three days saved by joining the steamer at the Suez Canal.

The Italians, for whom two further DO-X type craft are now nearly completed at the Altenrhein works in Switzerland, use Dornier-Wals between Brindisi, Athens, Istanbul and Alexandria, and it is reported they are practically always sold out well in advance. Bigger craft seem to be called for there, as on the Genoa-Barcelona route, where it is likewise difficult to get places on the seaplanes now used. The Baltic and North Sea routes, however, do not call for larger ships than the super-Wals now plying those lines.

The crux of the situation as far as operating these huge boats over longer stretches is concerned lies in the fact that motor development has not kept up with the strides made in plane construction. There is now no motor made which is light enough and at the same time has power and low consumption in sufficient degree to make it ideal for profitable use as a driving unit aboard a plane of the size of the DO-X, according to Dr. Claude Dornier, the latter's builder.

Hope lies in crude oil motors, such as are now being tried out in Junkers land planes, but the Dornier engineers want to see the type in operation a little longer before they are convinced it meets other requirements as well as it does the demand for low consumption.

ing loudly. Beside him, unconscious or dead, was a woman who evidently was his mother."

Called "Clearly a Wrecking Job."

SPRINGFIELD, Mo., Aug. 31 (AP).—John A. Rutledge, yardmaster of the St. Louis-San Francisco Railroad, reported late tonight to Vice President J. E. Hutchison, in charge of operations, that the wreck of the railroad's "Texas Special" was caused by a pile of rock placed on the rail. He reported that the pile of rock had been firmly braced by timber.

After receiving the roadmaster's report Mr. Hutchison said:

"It is very clearly a train wrecking job. There seems to be no doubt of it."

Mr. Hutchison said that Mr. Rutledge's report indicated "the rocks had been placed there by some one familiar with railroading."

20 LETTERS CHARGE TRAFFIC IN OFFICES

INQUIRY POWERS DEBATED

NEW ATTACK BY SOCIALISTS

Statement Says Mayor Renamed Two City Marshals After Removal on Serious Charges.

While most of the investigations into the Healy-Ewald case were suspended over the holiday week-end, Thomas Penney Jr., first assistant to Attorney General Hamilton Ward, continuing in Albany his preparations for the convening of an extraordinary term of the grand jury on Sept. 15, announced yesterday that he had received since the beginning of his investigation more than twenty letters charging buying of public posts. It was learned from other sources that charges of alleged misconduct while in office have been made against four magistrates in Manhattan and the Bronx.

Mr. Penney, in telling of receiving the letters, declined to discuss the specific charges made or to reveal the names of those accused. Each charge is being carefully considered, he said, though some of the letters were without signatures. Mr. Penney has been mentioned as the man who may be deputized by the Attorney General to prosecute the Ewald inquiry before the grand jury.

Ward Here Tomorrow.

Mr. Ward, who is at his country home near Albany, is expected in the city tomorrow to confer with Charles C. Burlingham, president of the Bar Association, and with Henry W. Taft, president of the County Lawyers' Association, and to conduct preliminary examinations of witnesses he expects to present to the grand jury later. Though the exact purpose of the conference was not made clear yesterday, Mr. Penney said that Mr. Ward wished to take advantage of the Bar Association's offer of help.

A discussion of the powers and limitations of the jurisdiction of Mr. Ward and the special grand jury also is expected to take place. Though Mr. Ward is anxious to define carefully the steps he may take under the law, there is no foundation for the belief that he will ask the Governor to broaden the scope of his inquiry, Mr. Penney said. After a meeting with Governor Roosevelt last week. Mr. Ward was quoted as saying that he considered it "highly improper" to ask for added powers.

"The Attorney General will push his investigation, concentrating on the Ewald case," Mr. Penney said, "and investigating all matters within his jurisdiction and authority as granted by the State Constitution."

Jurisdiction Still Debated.

Exactly what that jurisdiction is and what authority rests with the grand jury, with the Appellate Division and with District Attorney Crain continued to be a matter of debate yesterday. Samuel Seabury, who was appointed referee by the Appellate Division to investigate the minor judiciary in Manhattan and the Bronx, is strictly limited in the scope of his inquiry, and, since the grand jury will be convened to investigate the Ewald case, some doubt existed as to which investigating body would have the authority to inquire into charges of corruption made against the higher judiciary.

It was explained, however, by a leader of the bar that, although an extraordinary term of the grand jury has no right to appoint counsel of its own, its power is practically unlimited and it can properly investigate 'murder, arson and what-not." Governor Roosevelt's restriction limiting Attorney General Ward to the Ewald case does not prevent the Attorney General from prosecuting and investigating before the grand jury charges of office-buying when the office is elective, it was said.

There are only two cases, it was explained, where the Attorney General has the power to supersede the District Attorney: the first, when he is appointed by the Governor; the second, when under a special statute he is authorized to investigate crime against the elective franchise. This statute would permit Mr. Ward to investigate all charges against judges who hold elective offices, it was said. Any investigations coming outside of this category can still properly be presented to the grand jury, but must be prosecuted by the District Attorney. Therefore unless Mr. Ward's power is increased by the Governor—and it was intimated yesterday that this would not be done—the investigation before the grand jury is limited as far as Mr. Ward is concerned to elective offices, while Mr. Crain would properly be the one to investigate graft charges in appointments to office.

Crain Concurs in View.

Mr. Crain concurred with this view yesterday, saying that he had the power to investigate the higher judiciary in Manhattan when and if criminal charges were made. He would not say, however, if he intended to institute such an investigation, even if his inquiry into the charges of Jacob Cash regarding alleged grafting by Martin J. Healy, a Tammany leader, should pave the way. Mr. Crain said he would not commence a John Doe inquiry into Cash's charges until he read tomorrow morning the records in the Cash case, which were forwarded to his office by Mayor Walker Saturday.

Representative Fiorella H. La Guardia agreed that the Attorney General can go beyond the scope of the Ewald case in his investigation.

"I decline to believe," he said last night, "that the Attorney General can act only in the special case to which he has been appointed."

The extraordinary term of the grand jury is also privileged to go beyond this investigation and to inquire "into collateral and related matter," in the opinion of Mr. La Guardia, but the "ideal investigation" of the charges of corruption and graft, "if only politics" could be excluded, would be a legislative one, he said.

Since the matter is so "far-reaching and important to all New Yorkers," Mr. La Guardia suggested as the best substitute for a legislative investigation a general John Doe inquiry in all the five boroughs with a special term of the grand jury sitting in each borough and with the Attorney General appointed by the Governor to supersede the District Attorney of each county to press the inquiry.

Mr. La Guardia said he did not intend this as a reflection on any of the District Attorneys, but "this investigation is so interwoven with politics that it is humanly impossible for the District Attorney and his staff to carry it through."

The Attorney General, Mr. La Guardia asserted, should be appointed not only to press the investigation but to prosecute any indictments that might arise from them.

In addition to his conference tomorrow, Mr. Ward is expected to question Thomas T. Tommaney, chief clerk to Sheriff Farley, whose resignation or dismissal from that office is expected tomorrow. On Wednesday, Mr. Penney said, Mrs. Bertha E. Ewald and Healy are scheduled to appear in the Attorney General's office to tell what they know of the charge that Ewald paid Healy $10,000 for his appointment. Healy will also be examined later in the week, it was said, and Mr. Penney said he was hopeful that most of the material witnesses in the case would be examined before the end of the week.

Federal Attorney Tuttle will press his investigation of the income-tax returns of Mr. Healy in the years 1928 and 1929 tomorrow before a new Federal grand jury. Healy has already been indicted by another Federal grand jury for failing to file an income-tax return for 1927.

Socialists Make Charges.

In a statement issued yesterday by the Socialist party through former Municipal Court Justice Jacob Panken, Socialist candidate for Congress in the Fourteenth District, it was charged that two city marshals had been reappointed by Mayor Walker after their dismissal following serious charges. Mr. Panken also charged that the Mayor "knows of the underhand methods by which the choice of Tammany ward-heelers to fill vacancies on the Municipal Court bench has been made" and of the general practice of "fixers" which prevails in those courts, which he characterized as "nests of corruption."

The two men, Mr. Panken said, are City Marshal Morris Florea and City Marshal Lazarus. Florea was dismissed in 1928 and was reinstated by Mayor Walker after a second hearing, in which he was exonerated of all charges.

DAWES VISITS SCENES LINKED TO COLUMBUS

Sees Reputed Tomb in Seville Sight-Seeing—Will Leave for Paris Today.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

SEVILLE, Aug. 31.—His archaeological investigations over, Ambassador Dawes devoted today entirely to sight-seeing.

The principal point in his itinerary was the fifteenth century cathedral wherein Columbus knelt to pray before starting his voyage to the New World. The General stood a moment in front of a large convent in which all Southern Spain believes the great explorer lies buried.

Later he drove about the city and visited the ancient Alcazar, or Moorish palace, afterward going to the ancient Roman ruins, Italica, where he viewed a stadium capable of holding 15,000 people.

After lunching tomorrow with Infante Alfonso, Infanta Beatriz and probably viewing the site of the recent exposition, the General will catch a night train for Paris.

The General has been traveling very fast throughout this trip, and will be forced to rush from one station to another at Madrid to make his connection. He is expected in Paris on Wednesday morning, and will spend a few days there before returning to London.

DRINKS TO LUCK, LOSES IT.

Special to The New York Times.

BLOOMFIELD, N. J., Aug. 31.—Peter Gorsira, 45 years old, of 100 Bank Street, Newark, did not know when he was well off, but he does today.

Gorsira was arrested late last night on suspicion of driving a car under the influence of liquor.

Dr. J. P. Klenk, who examined Gorsira, said he was fit to operate a car, and he was released. Gorsira was jubilant over his release and on his way home stopped in a saloon to celebrate his "luck."

One hour later Gorsira was arrested by Patrolman Charles Hanily for operating a car on Grove Street in zigzag fashion. This time he was pronounced unfit to drive, and after several hours in a cell was fined $200 by Recorder W. P. Rawson and his license was revoked for two years.

LILLIAN GISH BITTEN BY DOG

Actress Attacked at Norwalk by Mongrel as She Defends Pet.

Miss Gish suffered a wound on the palm one inch long and another on the back of her thumb half an inch deep.

She was rushed to Norwalk Hospital, where an anti-toxin was administered, and then taken to her home.

MAIL PILOT STARS AT CHICAGO RACES

WILLIAMS IN NEW STUNT

Climbs Upside Down for Dive and Roll to Thrill 50,000—Speed Trophy Race Today.

CURTISS REYNOLDS AIRPORT, Chicago, Aug. 31.—In spite of good races, an entertaining program of aerobatic and grotesque flying and the presence of Captain von Gronau and his transatlantic shipmates today at the National Air Races, interest centred tonight in the speed classic which will close the eight days' program tomorrow, a 100-mile unlimited free-for-all for the Charles E. Thompson trophy and purses amounting to $10,000.

Eleven planes have been entered, but it is generally believed that four pilots—Captain Frank Hawks, James Haizlip, Lee Schoenhair and Captain Arthur H. Page of the Marines—will fight it out among themselves for first place.

Captain Hawks will fly his Whirlwind Travelair Mystery S, with which he established his transcontinental record. He has replaced the wings that crossed the country in twelve and a half hours with shorter, flatter panels for this race.

James Haizlip will pilot another Whirlwind Travelair Mystery S which Major James H. Doolittle has been stunting during the week.

Schoenhair will race in Mattie Laird's latest creation, a Laird biplane with 15-foot wings powered with a special Wasp engine.

Captain Page, winner of the Curtiss marine trophy last May, will be at the stick of a Curtiss Hawk monoplane, a service type Hawk with the lower wing cut away, wing radiator and a Conquerer motor which has been stepped up to nearly 800 horsepower.

Another entrant who has made a remarkable record during the week is Ben Howard, St. Louis air mail pilot. Howard has entered his homemade little white monoplane in the Thompson trophy, he says, "just to be ornery."

The other pilots are not discounting Howard's chances to finish among the leaders. Today he chalked up his fourth victory since the races started. His plane is powered with a Cirrus 100-horsepower motor and he has been winning races against planes with thrice the power.

Speed Event for Women.

Another speed event of interest in the last day's program tomorrow is the free-for-all for women for the trophy given by Mrs. Robert R. McCormick and cash prizes of $2,500. The entrants include most of the women stars at the races.

Today against a fast field Howard added a $500 first prize, bringing his total for the meet so far to $3,150. He averaged 154.83 miles an hour with his motor throttled. Second place went to William Ong of Wichita, who flew a pretty race to make the twenty-five miles in 145.49, average speed. E. V. Newson, in a special Commandair monoplane, was third.

Howard built his racer between flights with the night mail on the Universal airline between Omaha and St. Louis. He began it just after the air races last year, where he was only a spectator. Gordon Israel, 19-year-old St. Louis high school boy, helped in the engineering and construction. Neither Howard nor his assistant are technical school graduates and when they came against the higher mathematics involved in stress analysis Israel had to spend two months in night school picking up enough geometry and physics to solve the problem. On one problem involving calculus they called in a professor of mathematics.

Next Wednesday night Howard expects to be back on the mail line.

Captain Wolfgang von Gronau flew over the field this afternoon escorted by a six-plane formation of United States marines. The big Dornier came down over the stands in wide sweeps and then swung majestically out over Lake Michigan to land at the naval base. There he was picked up in the amphibian of John Hertz, former head of the Yellow Cab interests, and flown to the field. He arrived with his companions in time to witness the amusing antics of Flight Lieutenant R. L. Atcherly in a student training plane.

Atcherly today illustrated how a ship can be stalled and recovered within ten feet of the ground, although he dragged his wings in the dust in doing it.

The Dornier Wal, Captain von Gronau said, would start back toward New York tomorrow. He added that he disliked exceedingly leaving before the end of the day's program, but that his presence and that of his companions was required in the East by Tuesday.

Alford J. Williams added something new to his bag of tricks today. Starting at a low altitude on his back, hanging from his straps head downward he put his Curtiss Hawk into a climb, completing the first half of an outside loop. To keep his engine running Williams was forced to resort to a hand pump, driving the gasoline up into the engine. As the blue and yellow machine dived, Williams executed a half roll and swung upward into another loop.

Williams Shows His Daring.

Williams ended his show with an inverted falling leaf, followed by his famous upside-down landing, in which, engine cut, he drifts down rapidly head downward, and then executes a half roll back to the normal position just in time to set his wheels down safely. The crowd, which today numbered 50,000, was enthralled by Williams's manoeuvres.

A novelty in air racing was introduced this afternoon when the pilots of four amphibians raced to the lake front near the Drake Hotel, alighted on the water at the Oak Street yacht basin, "rescued" four life-size floating dummies and flew back twenty miles to the airport.

The rules required that they land and fetch the dummies to the announcer's stand. Each pilot was armed with a harpoon with which to spear his drowning man. Arthur Caperton, flying a Wasp-motored Sikorsky, won the race as much by his fast footwork with the dripping dummy as his flying. Bob Gast, with another Sikorsky, was second, and Homer Berry in a third Sikorsky was third. Arthur O. Johnson, flying a Savoia Marchetti sport amphibian, lost a wing pontoon when he alighted on the water and was forced to drop out.

Verne Roberts won a twenty-five-mile race for cabin planes with motors of 800 cubic-inch displacement flying a Warner-powered monocoupé. He flew the five-mile course five times at an average speed of 145.58 miles an hour. J. H. Livingston was second and R. T. Quimby was third, both flying Warner monocoupés.

In a parachute jumping contest which ended the afternoon program Roger Don Rae of East Lansing, Mich., pulled his silken umbrella together by the shrouds and fell like a brick for 2,000 feet.

He was but a hundred feet from the ground when he released the shrouds and the parachute opened just in time to let him down gently. He landed within seventeen and a half feet of the centre of the circle, winning the daily contest.

Macready Reported Out of Danger.

CHICAGO, Aug. 31 (AP).—Major John A. Macready, who yesterday cracked up the speedy ship in which he intended to race in the 100-mile Thompson trophy race tomorrow, was reported out of danger at an Evanston hospital today.

He suffered a fractured nose, fractured shoulder and bruises about the head and body. An X-ray disclosed there were no internal injuries.

CUBA HUNTS COMMUNIST.

Ambassador Ferrara's Nephew, Once Deported, Returns to Country.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

HAVANA, Aug. 31.—Word of the arrival at Santiago de Cuba of Otelo Matacena Ferrara, an Italian and a nephew of the Cuban Ambassador to the United States, Orestes Ferrara, is keeping Secret Service operators and police busy in an attempt to locate the Italian.

Otelo Ferrara, a notorious Communist, was deported from Cuba four months ago after having been identified with Red activities here and will be deported again when found.

STABS MATE, OFFERS BLOOD

Boston Woman, Relenting, Volunteers to Aid Transfusion.

BOSTON, Aug. 31 (AP).—The sight of her husband's blood which she had drawn with a carving knife caused a woman's anger to melt into pity that found her willing later to give her own blood to save his life here tonight.

Mrs. Winifred Harrington, 49, resorted to the knife after a quarrel with her husband, James. Police, called to the scene, found him lying on a bed, badly wounded, while she wiped the blood from the weapon. He was carried to a hospital, where his name was placed on the danger list, while she was arrested on a charge of assault with a sharp weapon.

It being feared that the husband would die, Mrs. Harrington was taken to the hospital to be at his side. On her arrival a physician stated that a blood transfusion might be necessary, and he asked Mrs. Harrington if she would be the blood donor.

"Sure I will," she replied.

A change in the man's condition obviated the necessity of a transfusion, however, and Mrs. Harrington was taken back to jail.

of Salisbury, and meaning thereby not the acceptance of socialism as a social program, but seeking to emphasize that "the viewpoint and outlook of general welfare which marked Socialist teaching has come to claim a dominant place in the policies as well as in the thoughts of the defenders of the existing order."

That order, Dr. Butler warned, can be preserved only to the extent to which the general social welfare is balanced justly against the rights of the individual. The rights of the individual, he maintained, will be preserved only if he is not permitted to subject the welfare of the community to his own selfish interests.

"The ideal society," Dr. Butler said, "is not the carefully graded Republic of Plato, or the Communist State of Marx or Lenin. It is the free association of men acting under the Bill of Rights, but acting each with high intelligence, with moral purpose, and all socially minded."

Liberalism and Capitalism.

"The name which should be given to the existing social, economic and political order, but which has unfortunately been claimed in many countries by a single political party, is liberalism. It is liberalism as contrasted with any system of despotism, of feudalism, or of aristocracy, which best describes those free institutions upon which most modern governments now rest and from which they take their character and their form. Capital is an incident and a by-product in the growth of liberty and in the development of liberalism. It is neither the foundation of liberalism nor its object. It is not the first, the fundamental, or the controlling element in liberalism; on the contrary, it is always secondary, incidental and subordinate. The main aim is human liberty, and capitalism can have a place in any scheme of liberalism only if it aids and promotes liberty rather than prevents and restricts it. If, therefore, we can change the forum of debate from capitalism, on the one hand, and either communism or socialism on the other, to liberalism on the one hand and either communism or socialism on the other, we shall be in a position much more clearly and effectively to understand what is involved in the present-day conflict and how it all rests upon and springs out of the fundamental problem of the one and the many.

"The use of the word capitalism to describe and to identify the existing social and economic order is misleading in the extreme. The exponents and defenders of that order should never have permitted it, for it has blinded men to the real issue between collectivism and its opposite, and thereby has concealed from them the essential nature of the present-day character of the problem of the one and the many. The name capitalism, false as it is, has become communism's best debating point."

In the long course of human events, he said, liberty has come to mean that freedom of thought, speech, endeavor, accomplishment and possession which finds formal expression in the historical documents that have marked the process of nation-building in Great Britain, France, Germany and the United States. These he said are summed up for all time in classic form in the first ten amendments to the United States Constitution.

Dr. Butler disagreed with the statement in the Constitution that all men are created equal. "Progress," he went on, "means elevation and elevation means advance above a dead level of uniformity and mediocrity. Equality of men must, therefore, mean something other than physical, intellectual and spiritual likeness.

The Russian Experiment.

"It is liberalism, conceived in this spirit, which is the object of the most vigorous onslaught by the collectivist teachings, and that onslaught today occupies the centre of the world's stage. Above and beyond the scattered collectivist organizations and the widely distributed collectivist agitations in many lands, there is the colossal experiment which is going forward in Russia. Here we have before our eyes a vast laboratory of tests and experimentation with that form of political and social economic organization which is so earnestly, so fanatically, urged as an alternative to liberalism and as an almost incomputable improvement upon it.

"In the western world and particularly in the United States it is not easy to secure a fair hearing for the Russian experiment or an open-minded consideration of the principles upon which it rests. That experiment so shocks our western sense of right and justice and so arrogantly insults our established faith in liberalism, that for the most part we close our eyes and our minds to what is going forward in Russia and decline to consider it as anything but outlaw. This, however, will hardly do. Tolerance of opposing doctrine and a willingness to hear and to discuss it are essential elements of liberalism itself.

"An area which spreads over half Europe and a third of Asia, which occupies almost one-sixth part of the habitable surface of the globe and which makes place for perhaps 150,000,000 human beings, is not to be neglected or lightly waved aside. Should any new form of political and economic organization permanently establish itself there, it is certain that the whole world would feel its effects."

Urges Fairness in Discussion.

After asserting that the revolution in Russia will not allow itself to be considered as merely national and that violence is one of its professed methods, he continued:

"If it were content to offer itself through argument, example and appeal to public opinion as an alternative to liberalism, communism would quickly have a standing in the court of reasonable discussion and debate and would stand or fall upon its own merits. But whatever its philosophic foundation, the movement itself, to all intents and purposes, commits suicide when it makes violence and international disturbance a part of its formal program.

"Nothing is more certain than that this part of the Communist program must be yielded if communism as an economic and political philosophy is to get a hearing in the court of public opinion. So long as the Communist movement is necessarily accompanied by violence, just so long must that violence be treated as such by lovers of law and order, regardless of its Communist origin and association. If communism as a form of social philosophy is to obtain a fair hearing in the court of public opinion, it must cease from violence and international agitation. If it cannot and will not do this, then it is doomed in advance."

Assuming that communism does cease from violence and international agitation, Dr. Butler said, the liberal will examine open-mindedly its principles and arguments. The liberal will note, he said, that "communism exalts a single social and economic class to permanent political power and that it disavows absolutely the universal and equal citizenship and civil rights of all men regardless of their attainments or possessions and regardless of their economic or social status."

This he declared to be "the really crucial point of difference between liberalism and communism." "Liberalism," he said, "builds upon equal opportunity for each individual, and looks to such control and guidance of social and economic forces as will make this equality of opportunity a reality and not a mere formula. Communism, on the other hand, accepts as its starting point an economic system as fundamental and permanent and accepts it as the basis for the erection of a class state with a class government. Which of the two is really in position to do most for the whole people? Here is the crux of the argument."

Protection Against Exploitation.

When a country is young, Dr. Butler said, there is need for settlers, exploration and development, and no one much cares who controls the sources of water power development or the great forests or ore lands. But later on the dependence of the whole people upon these natural resources is made so evident that liberalism devises ways and means to protect the people as a whole against exploitation by individuals in the name of civil, economic and political liberty.

"It is in this way," he continued, "that there has arisen a large area of difficult and disputed questions which are now engaging the attention of intelligent men in almost every land. The waves of prosperity and depression in business, the seasonal and even more permanent unemployment of large numbers of men and the provisions for dependents and for old age are everywhere under vigorous examination and debate with a view to the solution of the problems which they raise in the spirit of liberalism and in accordance with its principles. There can be no more effective answer to the Communist than so to guide liberalism and so to develop and apply its principles as to meet these questions and others like them in a way that will convince men everywhere both of the disinterestedness of the effort and of the success of its policies.

"Quite apart from all this, however, there is need of a change of heart and a change of point of view on the part of those individuals who, under liberalism, are able to achieve and who do achieve marked success in the accumulation of wealth. Probably the multi-millionaire of today and the directors of large corporate organizations, as much as any other single force, hold the future of liberalism in their own hands. Each time that service is subordinated to gain, communism is offered a helping hand.

"If those who achieve great wealth honestly and honorably treat their accumulation as a merely personal or family possession, then they strike a blow at liberalism at which communism will be quick to take advantage. If, however, they use their accumulation not to overburden, and often to tempt to waste and ruin, women and children who are dependent upon them, but as new material for public service through public benefaction, then they will find little jealousy or resentment, no matter what their accumulation. It is the use of great wealth made by a Carnegie, a Rockefeller, a Harkness, a Rosenwald, and others like-minded with them which most completely justifies liberalism in offering opportunity to the individual to make these vast accumulations.

"The corporate form of business organization now almost universal is again a reinforcement to liberalism because it defines and exalts trusteeship and puts the managers of a corporate activity in a position of public authority and public service as if in governmental office. The railways, the banks, the public utility organizations and other types of corporations are all public in the sense that they exist to serve the public, that they rest upon public consent and public approval, and that the public through its government inspects, taxes, and in various ways limits their activities. While all these things are not socialism in the technical sense, they are socialistic, or, as I should prefer to call them, socially minded.

"If, on the other hand, an opposite point of view and opposite tendency should prevail, and if the beneficiaries of liberalism were to fail to be socially minded and should insist on treating as merely the wholly private possession of the one that which the authority and consent of the many have permitted them to acquire, then the cause of communism would move a long way forward. Liberalism has its future in its own hands. If it shows itself intolerant of opposition and criticism, ignorant of alternative proposals for social and economic organization, and ruthless in its support of the one whom it has exalted despite what happens to the many who have exalted him, then it is liberalism that is doomed.

"Not alone those who, in a democratic State, are chosen to governmental office are public servants, but also those who, in the sphere of liberty as marked off from the sphere of government, are engaged in occupations which have a public incidence or a public reference. He who in the sphere of liberty, exploits the people is in the same class as he who, in the sphere of government, is false to his trust. It is for officials of government, whether executive, legislative, or judicial, clearly to grasp the spirit as well as the teaching of the bill of rights and effectively and justly to apply these in their official acts. It is for public servants in the field of non-governmental endeavor to mark their steps likewise."

NEW EBB IN AUGUST SHOWN IN BUSINESS

A. F. of L. Survey, Calling It the "Worst Month," Cites Extremes of Output and Trade Cuts.

BUT PREDICTS FALL GAINS

Cooperation Is Urged on Workers and Employers to Raise Efficiency and Maintain Buying Power.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31.—A return of public confidence and the maintenance of the buying power of the great mass of workers is necessary for the correction of depressed conditions, according to conclusions stated in the monthly survey of business of the American Federation of Labor, made public today.

Terming August "the worst month of the business depression thus far," the survey credited manufacturers and employers, who have been faced with worse conditions than during the depression of 1924, with taking less drastic retrenchment measures, but found that "the rapid increase of wage cuts in July showed a dangerous tendency."

As for retail business, the survey found that August sales were below those of June and July, but reported more activity in the week just ended. Retail buying, it stated, was reflected in better conditions among manufacturers, and the forecast was made that "recovery may begin this Fall with slight gains in the next few months and more rapid progress next Fall."

Pointing out that despite closely restricted production, the stocks held by manufacturers were increasing until recently, while, due to close buying, retail distributers had held their stocks to a minimum, the survey emphasized the need of sales stimulus.

Production Lowest Since 1924.

Commenting on the cumulative character of the situation in August, the survey said:

"Production of mines and factories dropped 4 per cent below the previous low point reached last December and fell to the lowest figure since 1924. The general level of business activity dropped to 14 per cent below normal and reached the lowest point since 1922.

"Industries made a drastic effort in July to reduce the stocks of goods on hand. The automobile industry reduced production 24 per cent from the June level, cotton industries continued to curtail production steadily and steel mills reduced operations to 56 per cent of capacity, from 69 per cent in June. All but one of the industries reported in the Federal Reserve Board's early indexes declined."

Production in July fell well below that of last December, it was added, but incomplete figures were said to indicate that stocks held by manufacturers might show that gain in striking a balance had been made.

Noting an improvement in the efficiency of manufacturers, stimulated by the necessity of retrenchment, the survey continued:

"Reports are that many firms are tightening organization practices and are in better shape. An unusually large number of new and improved machines are being offered and there is extraordinary improvement in designing and planning departments.

"In lines of goods sold directly to retail stores or the final customer manufacturers are constantly bringing out new things to stimulate buying; buyers are combing the market for new products.

"Successful operation is as much the concern of the wage-earners as their employers. For industry cannot work upward out of this depression until a satisfactory basis for operation is achieved. Therefore it is the workers' responsibility to see to it that wasteful methods are checked and efficiency improved."

Reduced wages were a greater business hazard than reduced farm income, the survey added, acknowledging the plight of agriculturists, but pointing out that "farmers' incomes form 10 per cent of the total national income, and wage earners' incomes 55 per cent." Salaried workers were credited with 5 per cent of the total income, leaving 30 per cent accruing from capital investments.

"Wage-earners do a great deal more than 55 per cent of the buying, however," the survey went on. "Wage-earners and their families are 80 per cent of our total population, and to feed, clothe and house this 80 per cent alone requires considerably more than half of the product of food, clothing and housing industries.

"Workers' buying power has been seriously reduced by unemployment, part-time work and wage cuts. In every month of 1930 unemployment has been at a very high level, and especially so in February and the last two months.

"A very slight improvement of three-tenths of 1 per cent in August foreshadows the increase in employment which we feel confident will come with the Fall busy season in September and October."

Asking the question "Shall wage cuts postpone recovery?" the survey stated that these started in December, continued gradually through March, then increased sharply and reached a high point in July. It was added, however, that unemployment and part-time work had cost wage earners more than did the wage cuts in 1930.

Need to Maintain Buying Power.

Asserting that manufacturers had been marking time, waiting for buying to take up over-large stocks, and pointing out that sales stimulus was needed, the survey continued:

"Stocks of goods in manufacturers' hands caused concern before the drastic production cuts in July. Retail stores also had supplies of left-over merchandise which they were anxious to clear before ordering new materials, and were letting many more popular lines run out while trying to dispose of the less salable goods. These stocks of goods hinder new buying and manufacture.

"Business had always resorted to the principal method of reducing stocks of goods in times of depression—to curtail production. With all the drastic curtailments, stocks in June were still higher than they were a year ago, although production, even before July, had dropped [illegible] per cent and had been at a low level for eight months."

However, the conclusions in the survey indicated, curtailment of production would be useless without the maintenance of buying power.

"The present cure, to slow down the whole industrial mechanism and reduce drastically to lower levels, is wasteful and causes untold hardship in all quarters," it stated. "To maintain workers' buying would maintain production and would bridge the gap between such reductions.

"Reserve funds for maintaining workers' incomes, similar to the reserves industry now kept for dividends, would be a first aid for future depressions. The least we can do is to avoid wage cuts and maintain workers' buying power at the highest possible level."

FIND TREASURE SHIP WITH LOST $5,000,000

By DAVID SCOTT.

had said could not be found. The Artiglio was moved slowly.

"Now I can see three portholes," said Signor Bargellini over the thin wire which connected him to his mates. "They are big ones. I think I am alongside the forecastle."

"You can tell the forecastle by the anchors," Signor Gianni explained. "The Egypt carried them on deck."

Long Discussion Follows.

A long discussion on the crane followed. How tall was it?

Signor Bargellini could not tell. Peering from a yard away, he could see only a few feet of its base. But it was large and made of steel plate.

A hydraulic crane is easily distinguished by a vertical piston, with pulleys on top, over which steel cables pass. The difficulty was to get the diver even for a moment opposite the piston. He was raised and lowered and raised again while the crane first presented an enigmatic butt end to his window and then faded away altogether in the green half-light.

For half an hour the game of hide and seek went on. The voice of the diver in his steel shell at the bottom of the sea came briskly over the telephone and could be heard across the desk.

Once he failed to answer promptly to a question from above and in a flash the careless gayety of his mates became tense silence and the man at the telephone called his name urgently again and again with fear in his voice. Steel cables are known to break and even inch-thick glass may sometimes crack. Water sixty-six fathoms deep exerts a pressure equal to that in a locomotive boiler and can crush the life from a man in no time. If a joint fails or the glass bursts you may dig what is left of your diver out of his shell with a marlin spike.

Finds the Crane.

At last Signor Bargellini found what he wanted and came up to report that he had seen a hydraulic crane of the type carried by the Egypt. As he moved aft he saw a deckhouse—probably the chart house—then a ladder leading down from the boat deck to the hurricane deck on the starboard side and, finally, starboard midship, the hydraulic crane.

The crane was vitally important, and Signor Franceschi, a second diver, promptly went down to confirm Signor Bargellini's report. The tide was turning, and for a time he saw nothing but three conger-eels and a few rocks. Then he saw something looming through the green twilight and found himself bumping against a lifeboat's davit so large that it could only belong to a good-sized ship. In a second attempt he found himself on the boat deck, dropped over the side and found rows of eighteen-inch portholes—a liner's ports, beyond doubt.

To realize the difficulty of a diver's tasks, one must remember he is nearly blind. He cannot locate an object in the distance and ask to be moved toward it. He sees it only by chance as it passes within six feet of his face.

Gianni Goes Down.

Signor Gianni finally settled the question of cranes by going down himself. He landed between the Egypt's funnels and close to one of them. Moving forward he saw water tanks and insulators which he eagerly picked out on the ship's plan when he came up. He was so determined to know exactly where he was that he began rushing up and down between the Egypt and the Artiglio at ten-minute intervals, dropping down to the bottom of the Atlantic and bobbing up with no more trouble than a man might have in using an elevator and without much more loss of time.

It was very different from the endless "decompressing" of the rubber-shirted divers, and at the end there was no doubt the Egypt had been found.

In the evening after sunset guitars and banjos came out for the first time this season, and as most of the crew seemed able to play better than the average professional musician they made a pretty celebration. With darkness came our old enemy, fog, and the Artiglio and her sister-ship, the Raffio, dripped and bellowed through the night to the chorus of wailing foghorns from the trade route.

The Italians now have a good chance of success if the sea is kind. The patience and ingenuity which brought the search to a successful end must now be concentrated on the tremendous problem of making the Egypt yield her treasure. Recovery of the gold and silver may, however, have to be postponed until next year.

Crash Occurred in Heavy Fog.

The Egypt was rammed and sunk on the evening of May 20, 1922, by the French cargo steamer Seine in a thick fog off Finistere, Spain. The death list in the collision was put at between 95 and 100, including passengers and crew. More than 230 persons were saved by the crew of the Seine and were brought into Brest.

The crash occurred just as the Egypt's passengers were going down to dinner, about 7:30 P. M. For some time previously the liner had been moving at reduced speed through the dense fog. Near the Island of Ushant, about twenty-two miles from the coast, the Seine suddenly loomed up and, before the engines could be reversed, her bow crushed through the midship plates of the Egypt.

Although his ship was badly damaged, the captain of the Seine turned about and started to pick up the men and women who had put off from the Egypt in lifeboats. He had to work fast, for the passenger liner swiftly filled with water, and twenty minutes after the collision she was almost totally submerged.

In telling the story later, the captain of the Seine said:

"The scene was terrible. We at once launched our whalers and filled them as fast as the men could work. All the while cries reached us from drowning men and women out in the fog trying to keep afloat with their lifebelts. For three hours my men worked with all their might, trying to save as many as possible, and it was only when we could find no trace of any other living soul that we left the scene."

The Egypt had left London for Bombay with thirty-eight passengers and a crew of 290. Some of the rescued charged, after they were landed at Brest, that the Indian sailors on board had swept them aside in the rush for the lifeboats, forcing passengers to leap into the sea with lifebelts.

One report had it that the Egypt was carrying £1,500,000 in gold when she went down, in addition to a valuable general cargo. The Egypt was a vessel of 8,000 tons.

Two Americans died in the collision. They were Mrs. Minnie L. Sibley of Toledo, Ohio, a Congregationalist missionary, and Miss Virginia Boyer, a Lutheran missionary, on her way to India.

The spot where the Egypt went down was near Green Rocks, where the liner Drummond Castle went to the bottom with 247 persons in June, 1896.

NEW CRIME OUTBURST STIRS BOSTON POLICE

Armed Cars Sent Out Following Score of Hold-Ups and 95 Burglaries in 48 Hours.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Aug. 31.—Boston's police flying squadrons, abolished several months ago because of lack of anything for them to do, were re-established on emergency orders from Police Commissioner Hultman today and scattered through the city armed with riot guns and tear-gas bombs following an outbreak of crime within the past forty-eight hours with the armed robbery of a jewelry store, a score of hold-ups, nearly a hundred house burglaries and the theft of forty-five automobiles.

Two automobiles carrying four men each and equipped with tear gas, rifles, riot guns and searchlights were patrolling the downtown area tonight, giving especial attention to jewelry and department store windows. Four others were on continuous duty in the outlying sections, while a reserve machine was held at headquarters.

The crime wave, described by the police as the most severe in seven years, reached its high point last night when five gunmen held up the Robinson & Co. jewelry store on Washington Street, leveled guns at several hundred theatregoers, shot the manager and escaped with $35,000 worth of gems.

Two West End gangs shot it out on a side street in the upper Back Bay Friday night, leaving three wounded in police hands.

Thugs working on foot and in automobiles perpetrated a dozen armed hold-ups between 10 o'clock last night and dawn today, while the headquarters police blotter showed ninety-five house burglaries in the forty-eight hours ending at 10 o'clock tonight.

Poland Jails Five as Parliamentary Immunity Expires.

WARSAW, Aug. 31 (AP).—Police today arrested four former Deputies and one former Senator of the White Russian radical group, their parliamentary immunity having expired with the dissolution of the Sejm and the Senate last week. All members of this faction except for one Deputy are now in jail.

Sixteen Communists also were arrested after police had searched numerous homes of Communists and confiscated large quantities of propaganda.

CAFE AFIRE, OWNER IN JAIL.

Coney Island Dance Hall Proprietor Has Double Misfortune.

While Louis Carazzo, proprietor of a Coney Island restaurant, was spending a night in jail pondering over his plight, he received word that another, in the form of fire, early yesterday morning, had put him out of business.

Carazzo is the operator of the Ritz Tavern, a restaurant and dance hall, at 17 Henderson's Walk. Late Saturday night, while patrons were still dancing, the police raided the place and alleged they found liquor. Carazzo was arrested and when he could not provide bail was locked up for the night.

The fire occurred several hours later, early yesterday morning, and so far as is known had no connection with the raid. The blaze ruined the furnishings of the Ritz Tavern and blackened the walls of the two-story frame building which houses the restaurant. Firemen estimated the damage at $10,000.

ILLINOIS FARM WIFE BLINDED AND BURNED

Unknown Assailant, Springing From Ambush, Hurls Acid and Then Ignites Her Clothing.

LAID TO EXTORTION PLOT.

Sheriff Says Slain Reed City Woman, and Her Husband Had Received Many Threatening Letters.

REED CITY, Ill., Aug. 31 (AP).—Mrs. Tranquita Rinaldo, 32 years old, blinded with acid and then burned to death last night by an unidentified assailant, who escaped, is believed by the police to have been a victim of extortionists.

The woman was able to give only a meager description of her assailant before she died. The man, who she said was about 40 years old, sprang out at her from a clump of bushes as she walked along a lonely road near her farm home here and discharged acid from a squirt gun into her eyes.

As she groped about blinded and screaming with pain, she said, he knocked her to the ground. An inflammable fluid was thrown over her clothing and ignited and then she saw her assailant flee toward the woods near by.

The woman was found by her husband and young son, who had become alarmed at her failure to return home from a neighbor's and had started a search for her. She died soon after being taken to a hospital.

Sheriff Ernest Fleming, who advanced the extortionist theory, said that the Rinaldos, thrifty farmers, had received several threatening letters demanding money.

"The couple came to me with the first of a series of extortion letters a year ago," he said. "About six months ago they received another letter commanding them to deliver the money at night at a lonely spot near Pekin. The Rinaldos waited there for hours while I myself and three deputies hid in the vicinity, but no one appeared.

"Since then they reported three men had appeared at their truck farm threatening to kill first Mrs. Rinaldo and then her children and husband if they failed to deliver the money. We have no clues toward their identity."

A force of deputies from the Sheriff's office searched about the scene of the attack today for trace of the slayer.

FILIPINOS SET FIRE TO ROOSEVELT BOOK

2,000 PEASANTS CHEER ACT

But Speaker Emphasizes Peaceful Fight Against Selection After Shout of "Death to Roosevelt!"

MANILA, Aug. 31 (AP).—Amid the shouts of some 2,000 Filipino peasants a copy of a book, supposed to be Nicholas Roosevelt's "The Philippines: A Treasure and a Problem," was publicly burned at Balintawak, Philippine national shrine, today.

The crowd was worked to a high pitch of excitement by a series of patriotic speeches in the Tagalog dialect. Mr. Roosevelt's book, or a dummy purporting to be the work of the man appointed during the recess of the American Senate as Vice Governor of the islands, then was burned on a pyre of bamboo sticks.

Before being burned the book was placed on an anvil and hammered with a mallet to emphasize further the crowd's resentment against Mr. Roosevelt's writings and its opposition to his appointment. Then it was handed to Representative Francisco Varona, Radical member of the Legislature and the moving figure behind the ceremony, who poured kerosene on it and ordered a torch applied.

It was not known whether the book burned actually was a copy of the much-discussed Roosevelt work. Señor Varona declined to give it to newspaper men for examination.

Attendance at the ceremony was a disappointment to its sponsors, who had expected 20,000. Señor Varona charged many were kept away through fear of arrest. The authorities, however, made no attempt to interfere. The demonstration was entirely orderly and, although the speakers urged non-cooperation with Mr. Roosevelt and the Hoover Administration for appointing him, no one advocated violence.

Once, however, when Señor Varona asked the crowd whether Filipinos should cooperate with such a man as Mr. Roosevelt, some one shouted, "Ma matay si Roosevelt," which is Tagalog for "Death to Roosevelt!" Señor Varona then silenced the crowd and told it that the Filipinos were not fighting Mr. Roosevelt with violence, but by peaceful means.

The ceremony opened with a parade to the monument to Andres Bonifacio, Filipino patriot, and the book was burned at the base of the statue. Labor organizations, Manila farmers and representatives from five neighboring provinces attended. Schoolgirls singing the Filipino national anthem were booed by the crowd because the children sang in English.

SCAPEGRACE RETURNS AS HERO OF THE AIR

TOKYO, Aug. 31 (AP).—Zehsaku Azuma, village scapegrace, who fled from his home and the priestly career selected for him by his parents, returned to Japan today an aviation hero, ending a flight that began in Los Angeles and traversed America, Europe and Asia.

Azuma landed at Tachikawa Airdrome at 5:20 P. M. and received an ovation from cheering thousands. In the crowd was his 70-year-old mother, who had not seen her son for fourteen years, and Matajiro Koizumi, Minister of Communications.

Azuma now shares national honors with Seiji Yoshihara, who dropped his light plane into Tokyo yesterday from Berlin. Yoshihara's feat of flying 11,404 kilometers [about 7,125 miles] in 70 hours 58 minutes flying time between Berlin and Tokyo is claimed as a world record for light aircraft.

Newspapers today contrasted Azuma's mischievous youth, spent in poverty, with the acclaim that greeted his return. Disliking training for the priesthood, he ran away to Kivoto, where he pulled a ricksha and did odd jobs to enable him to attend night school.

He gained the attention of an Okayama millionaire, who became his patron and financed a trip to America to study aviation.

Azuma went to California in 1916, learned to fly and prospered as a café owner in Hollywood. He did not return to Japan until today.

During the flight from Urusan, Korea, to Tokyo, Azuma halted at Okayama to pay his respects to his patron. He flew alone in a 200-horsepower Travelair biplane.

Azuma's mother, speaking the peasant dialect of the backyard district in Western Ishikawa prefecture, where the family lives, told reporters she was ignorant of her son's plans until she saw his picture in a newspaper and learned he was flying around the world. Since then, she said, she had been praying nightly at the village shrine, asking the ancestral gods to keep him safe.

FAIL TO FIND STOLEN PLANE

Special to The New York Times.

ROOSEVELT FIELD, L. I., Aug. 31.—A check-up of airports in the metropolitan district was made today by John Rintoul of Brooklyn and some of his friends without revealing any trace of his red Waco plane which was stolen from here yesterday. They were unable to find any place where the stolen plane had been refueled, although its gas tank was almost empty when it was taken.

Detective John Smith of the Nassau County police said the plane would be difficult to trace as it could easily be sold after its identification number on the wing had been painted out. Roosevelt Field officials ordered a strict watch to prevent more thefts.

KILLED IN MICHIGAN CRASH.

Hurley (Wis.) Man Was Passenger in Plane—Another Hurt.

IRONWOOD, Mich., Aug. 31 (AP).—Clarence Jacquart, 24, of Hurley, Wis., was killed and Morris Bergland, 22, also of Hurley, was injured when an airplane in which they were riding crashed after a faulty take-off near here today.

Ernest Brock, 24, of Ironwood, was piloting the plane, which was not licensed. He was uninjured.

CUBAN FLIER'S WIDOW LAYS ARREST TO PLOT

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

HAVANA, Aug. 31.—Reiterating her former statement that she is innocent of ever having possession of an official secret document of the Cuban military forces and branding the whole affair a conspiracy of Lieutenant Torres de Navarra and several former friends of her dead husband, Señora Martha Lane Morlote spent today in a hunger strike in the Marianao city jail.

"I believe the affair is a plot of Navarra and Salcines Morlote, a cousin of my late husband, to prevent me from receiving my pension of $90 a month, which helps support me and my infant daughter. I never had official army documents in my possession. I remember my husband used to keep these at home but I do not recall what they dealt with except that he took great care of them. Soon after the accident at Alacranes Airport, where my husband was killed, Lieutenant Martull of the Aviation Corps sent Private Marti to get whatever official papers were in my home. I turned all the documents over to Marti.

"The charges that I spied upon the government or was negotiating to sell the secret military code of the government to the United States and Colombia is absolutely false."

Regarding the charges that Señora Morlote was dealing with Colombia, Ricardo Gutierrez Lee, Colombian Minister to Cuba, said today:

"I have not the slightest official information regarding the affair, but believe the government of Colombia as a loyal friend of Cuba would not think of such a proposition."

That Judge Vianello will release Señora Morlote tomorrow morning for action by a military court-martial was indicated today. The judge believes the matter should be handled by the War Department. The charges of "spying, high treason and threatening the stability of the government" are admissible only in time of war, so high army officers believe the case will not be pressed.

Prominent society women and representatives of Cuban feminist societies and other women's organizations visited the jail today to express sympathy to Señora Morlota, assuring her they will use their power to free her and aid in disclosing the facts behind the arrest of the widow of one of the most famous Cuban aviators.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 31 (AP).—Following telephonic communications with a brother in Havana, Roy G. Lane of Longmeadow, a suburb of this city, learned tonight that his daughter, Mrs. Martha Lane Morlote, is to be released in the morning. Mr. Lane said if this did not take place he will immediately appeal to the American State Department for assistance in bringing about her release.

TO OPPOSE INCREASE ASKED IN PHONE TOLLS

The New York Telephone Company's petition for an increase in its station-to-station rate for toll calls within the State for distances from forty to fifty miles will be opposed by the Utility Consumers' League of New York, Maurice Hotchner, vice president and counsel for the organization, announced yesterday.

Mr. Hotchner, who is general counsel for the league, declared that it would appear before the Public Service Commission to protest against allowing the five-cent increase requested by the company. He ridiculed the company's contention that its revenues would be reduced, despite the increased rate, because of a proposed reduction of from five to eighty cents on calls between points more than seventy-two miles apart.

This assertion of net decrease in company revenues was described by Mr. Hotchner as "camouflage." He declared that the recent hearings on telephone rates and electric light charges have shown that the utility companies use the plea of reduced revenue as a "smoke screen" to conceal actual increases.

The company will ask the Public Service Commission, at a hearing on Wednesday, to permit the new rates to become effective on Oct. 1. The company's application did not state the amount by which its revenues would be cut if the changes were allowed.

ALLIGATOR TAKES HIS ARM.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 31.—A 300-pound alligator brought here yesterday from Tampa abruptly ended a water "circus" at a swimming pool this afternoon by chewing off the left arm of an "alligator wrestler."

Bobby Rogers, who wrestled alligators in Florida last Winter, was scheduled to begin a series of weekly matches at the local pool today, aided by his younger brother, George.

When the elder Rogers seized the alligator's tail it lunged suddenly and nipped his wrist. Then Rogers decided to tie the reptile's mouth. He told his brother to hold its mouth while he tied it. While George was holding the great jaws the alligator freed itself and fastened its teeth in the youth's left arm. Rolling over three times, the alligator tore off the youth's arm below the elbow. Rogers was taken to Frankford Hospital for an operation. The alligator was destroyed.

Special to The New York Times.

PENNSGROVE, N. J., Aug. 31.—Howard Turpin Jr., 18-year-old pilot, of Deepwater, N. J., and two companions were injured tonight when the Waco biplane they were flying crashed on a farm on the Pennsgrove-Salem road a mile from here.

Charles Reybold, 30, and Julius Needham, 29, also of Deepwater, were removed with Turpin to Salem County Memorial Hospital at Salem, where physicians said Reybold's right leg would have to be amputated. Turpin suffered fractures of both ankles and a fractured jaw, and Needham a fracture of the right ankle and right jaw.

Witnesses said the plane, which was flying at a low altitude, slid over on one wing and was entering a spin when it crashed. The occupants were thrown free of the wreckage.

HOOVER SETS PACE AS RIDER AT CAMP

DAY ONE OF RECREATION

With Week-End Business Finished Saturday, Executive Party Has Care-Free Leisure.

LURAY, Va., Aug. 31.—Work was put in the background at the Hoovers' Rapidan camp today as the President, Mrs. Hoover and their guests indulged themselves in the various forms of recreation afforded in the Virginia mountains. With the extended week-end holiday, the President yesterday finished such business as he had on the agenda.

Mr. Hoover late yesterday set the pace in recreation by taking a horseback ride on one of the seventeen animals at the marine camp down the mountain from his lodge.

Today Lawrence Richey, the President's personal secretary; Ferry K. Heath, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and Delano Large, 16-year-old nephew of Mrs. Hoover, rode across the Blue Ridge to Skyland, fifteen miles away. They took a circuitous route through White Oak Canyon, adding three miles to the trip, and on reaching Skyland rode their horses to the top of Stony Man Mountain, increasing their distance by fully two miles more.

Ride Is Hard on Heath.

Mr. Richey and Delano Large, hardened by many week-ends in the mountains, were little worse for their experience when they left Skyland by automobile for a fifty-mile highway drive back to the camp. Mr. Heath, however, did not try to conceal from three newspaper men who met the party that he welcomed the cushions of the automobile.

Save for their side trip through White Oak Canyon, the three followed the course of the proposed Hoover highway, which is to be the first link in a north-and-south artery through the Shenandoah National Park. They went by Hawksbill Peak to Crescent Rock, leaving the route there. After leaving the canyon, where Mr. Richey proposes to stock the little mountain stream with trout, every mile added to the toil of their mounts and from Skyland the horses were sent back by marine orderlies.

Mrs. Hoover, a veteran of the mountain trails, led a group for a brief horseback ride along the mountainside during the morning. Others hiked, pitched horseshoes, lolled about the camp and otherwise amused themselves.

Humor Prevails at Camp.

The atmosphere was one of carefree humor throughout the day. The tired plight of the three ambitious equestrians who had tried to better the Chief Executive's exploit in the mountains was greeted with fun on their return.

There were also some laughs on Mr. Heath from the night before, when Captain Joel T. Boone, the President's physician, put a mouse trap and a bunch of grapes in the Assistant Secretary's bed. The joke worked.

It has been a sort of old friends' week-end at the camp. Among the guests are J. V. N. Reynders, New York engineer, and his wife; Henry M. Robinson, Los Angeles banker and chairman of the financial section of the President's National Drought Committee, and Mrs. Robinson; Starr Myers, Professor of Politics at Princeton, and Mrs. Myers; George Baldwin, New York engineer, and Mrs. Baldwin; Mark Sullivan, author and Washington correspondent, and Mrs. Sullivan; Miss Martha Van Rensselaer, Professor of Home Economics at Cornell University; J. W. Philip, Fourth Assistant Postmaster General; J. N. Darling, cartoonist; former Governor J. P. Goodrich of Indiana, Mrs. Stark McGullin and Herbert Hoover Jr.

The party will return to Washington late tomorrow.

SAYS FRANCE FACES MILITARY UNCERTAINTY

MONTREAL, Aug. 31 (Canadian Press).—"The false idea that France is maintaining a formidable army has gained some popularity lately among those who do not understand the question of European armaments, nor appreciate the mystery surrounding German disarmament," Dr. Paul Mantoux, director of the School of Higher International Study at Geneva, who was a lecturer for France at the recently terminated Institute of Politics in Williamstown, Mass., said here today He is now spending a few days in Canada before returning to France.

Dr. Mantoux, who was the official interpreter at the Paris Peace Conference, found French uncertainty and apprehension were not without justification. He stated that Germany's army was supposed to be limited to 100,000 men, according to the peace treaty, but that there were certain mysterious circumstances surrounding the maintenance of this force. The sum of money spent annually on it would be sufficient to maintain twenty-three artillery divisions and twenty-one infantry divisions, and Germany was allowed but seven of each.

Furthermore, Germany has increased her military police, a body similar to the French gendarmerie but much more thoroughly military and equipped with machine guns, from 30,000 to 100,000 men, giving her 200,000 men under military discipline at all times.

Meanwhile, Germany's expense for armaments has gone up 62 per cent in five years, while, according to the experience of other countries in Europe, costs were up only 10 per cent, Dr. Mantoux said.

TWO SHARE $4,000 REWARD.

Plane Pilot and Life Guard Found Princeton Student's Body.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Aug. 31.—A reward of $4,000 will be divided between Captain Harry Kaviana, director of the Margate Life Guards, and an airplane pilot from the Cape May Coast Guard base for finding the body of Joseph England Roberts of Haddonfield, who was drowned at Ocean City last Sunday.

Mr. Roberts, a senior at Princeton University, was the son of Dr. Joseph E. Roberts. The identification was made by Dr. Milton J. Waas, a dentist who has attended the Roberts family for several years.

The body was sighted Friday afternoon by the pilot, on patrol duty between Cape May and this city. He circled around until he attracted the attention of Kaviana, who brought the body to shore.

APPEAL TO BRITAIN TO KEEP FREE TRADE

tion to the fact that the small populations of the dominions would not offer a market for British exports comparable with foreign countries. Doubt also is expressed that the dominions would enter into the proposed empire trade agreements in view of their own existing tariff policies.

Viscount Grey and his banker associates furthermore refer to the rapidly increasing investments of English capital in South America, especially in Argentina, and declare that an English tariff against those countries would prevent them from freely shipping goods with which to pay returns on those investments.

As for the practical effect on thought and on the discussion of these matters by British business interests it is perhaps unfortunate that Lord Grey's name heads the list of signatories, for he is not at all associated in the public mind with banking, commerce and industry, but is popularly known as a statesman and a distinguished leader of the Liberal party, which is bound traditionally to free trade regardless of changes in world conditions. But most of the 116 names are those of bankers and leaders of British industries.

There seems to be no unanimity on the tariff-free trade issue among the financiers associated in the management of any given bank. For example, the great banking institutions, like Lloyds, Midland, Westminster, National and Provincial, all of which were represented by signers of the July resolution favoring a tariff, are also represented by other directors on the list of men insisting that England adhere to free trade.

Text of the Statement.

Four years ago a number of distinguished bankers and commercial leaders signed a plea for the removal of tariffs and restrictions upon trade on the ground that they raised prices, diminished production, created artificial dearness and led to the impoverishment of Europe. Quite recently a resolution signed by some of the same names has been published appealing for "reciprocal trade agreements between the nations constituting the British Empire" and contemplating as a condition of securing such agreements the imposition of duties "on all imports from all other countries." The only reasons offered for this change in attitude are the disappointment of hopes expressed four years ago for an increase in trade restrictions in the interval and the growing sale of "surplus foreign products in the British market."

We cannot think these reasons are adequate for the sudden reversal of the system of free ports and open markets on which British commerce has been founded for many years. Few of the men who signed the plea of 1926 could have expected that the very difficult task of bringing down European tariffs would be achieved in four years. That process must inevitably be a slow one, but if the object is desirable the way to secure it is to persevere. As a matter of fact, there have been of late decreases as well as increases in tariffs in Europe, and commercial treaties have mitigated the effects and checked the rise of tariffs there. The worst increase in recent tariffs has been in Australia and the United States. The Balfour committee not long since recorded that the main increase in tariff rates on British exports has been within the empire itself.

There appears to be little ground for the contention that in the last four years the sale of surplus foreign products in the British market has steadily grown. There is no ground for disquiet in the increase in value of foreign imports in 1929 as compared with 1928 and the figures for these imports fell in 1927 and 1928. But it is difficult to deal with this point completely until the exact meaning of the phrase in the bankers' resolution is explained.

Not Remedy for Slump.

We find no reason for supposing it is possible to remedy the present trade depression by adding to our customs duties and thus diminishing our foreign trade. It will not be seriously disputed that tariffs are levied in order to raise prices. But since the first need of British producers who compete in foreign markets is to bring down the costs of production it would seem a little short of suicidal to impose duties on our supplies of raw material. We don't want to believe any stimulus afforded by protection to certain favored industries at home could compensate for mischief of this kind.

As regards the dominions, no one qualified to speak for them has admitted they are prepared to reverse their policy of building up their manufactures by taxing British goods. Australian tariffs against British manufactures have risen steadily for many years and recently have been increased in a startling manner. But even if the dominions were induced to lower tariffs in order to increase purchases from us it must be remembered that their small population cannot offer within a measurable time markets comparable in extent of value with those which foreign countries offer to trade.

Moreover, one needs to remind the signatories of the resolution that British investors have employed a very large amount of capital in foreign countries, particularly in South America, and that the income which this capital supplies contributes in no small degree to the well-being of the British people. To impose hindrances to the receipt of this income by taking the imports by which the service of this capital can alone be met would have the most prejudicial effect on our trade, our income and our capital investments.

It is equally obvious that the exclusion of Argentine and other foreign food products in favor of food produced in our dominions would bring the British farmer no relief, that the taxation of bread and meat is not likely to recommend itself to our urban population, that the taxation of raw materials is only too likely to strike a grave blow at some British industries which are already sufficiently depressed and that the general expansion of trade cannot be aided nor the total volume of employment in this country be increased by imposing taxes which diminish the purchasing power of the consumer and place fresh restrictions on the process of exchange.

Retaliation Is Opposed.

Nor is there any prospect that a policy of retaliation would bring down tariffs in foreign countries. All experience proves an increase in tariffs by one country merely encourages other countries to raise their tariffs still higher. Were our people to act in a manner suggested by the recent resolution the war of tariffs now being waged throughout the world would be greatly stimulated and the danger of a breakdown in trade and credit would become still greater.

In 1926 the bankers rendered a service in calling attention to the dangerous consequences that must come from the tariff policy which the nations were then pursuing. These consequences now are being felt in a greatly increased measure. We submit that what the present situation demands is reiterated emphasis of the advice given four years ago, not a proposal to do the very things against which the bankers then so earnestly warned the nations.

Among the signers of the above statement are Lord Bradbury, a director of Williams Deacon's Bank; Walter Runciman, director of the Westminster Bank; L. S. Montagu, Sir Alexander Kleinwort, Sir Arthur A. Haworth, a director of the Midland Bank; Sir Charles Addis, chairman of the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank; Sir Frederick Chance, a director of Martin's Bank; Sir Hugh Bell, Henry Bell, a director of Lloyds Bank; Allan H. Bright, a director of Barclay's Bank; H. A. Armistead, Allan H. Bright of Barclay's Bank; Laurence Currie of Glyn, Mills & Co.; Leonard B. Franklin, M. O. Fitzgerald, a director of the National Provincial Bank; J. Howard Fox of Lloyds Bank, H. N. Gladstone, Richard D. Holt, a director of Barclay's Bank; Walter R. Rea, Hugh L. Roxburgh, a director of the Midland Bank, and B. S. Rowntree.

DYING, KILLS ASSAILANT.

BARBOURVILLE, Ky., Aug. 31 (AP).—G. T. Lockhart, Chief of Police, and Pete Goodin, carpenter, killed each other in a pistol fight here last night.

The chief was called to quell a disturbance in the downtown section, where a group of men had gathered. As he stepped from his automobile, Goodin pulled a pistol and fired, hitting Mr. Lockhart in the heart.

As Mr. Lockhart fell, he fired at Goodin, the bullet entering the carpenter's head. Both men fell dead within three feet of each other.

London Paper Predicts Complete Break Over Unemployment.

LONDON, Aug. 31 (AP).—The Sunday Express today said that relations between Prime Minister MacDonald and David Lloyd George, Liberal leader, were somewhat strained after several discussions of the unemployment problem. It foresees a possible complete rupture between the Liberals and the Labor party.

Mr. MacDonald made a special trip to discuss this question with Cabinet Ministers and Mr. Lloyd George at a secret conference last week, coming from Lossiemouth, Scotland, where he had been spending his vacation.

The Express says that the conference ended without result, but that another meeting is to be held within a few days.

"The best informed political circles regard the failure of this coming meeting as practically a certainty and a complete rupture between the two parties is quite probable," it declares. "In the event of such a rupture the Liberals would join the Conservatives to defeat the government when Parliament meets on Oct. 28 and there will be a general election in November."

STEEL REFORM PLAN DRAFTED FOR BRITAIN

CALLS FOR WIDE SCRAPPING

J. L. Replogle Says Practically All English Blast Furnaces Should Be Replaced.

HUGE MODEL PLANT URGED

Conferences on Reorganization Will Be Held This Week, but Slump Makes Changes Now Unlikely.

Special Cable to The Chicago Tribune.

PARIS, Aug. 31.—The Chicago Tribune has obtained access to a report prepared by J. Leonard Replogle, "steel administrator" for the United States Government during the war and now retired as one of the "steel kings" of America, for a group of English magnates who intend to reorganize the British steel industry.

Annexed to his report is a detailed scheme prepared by his technical engineers in America for the construction of a mammoth model steel plant in England at a cost of about $300,000,000 and with a capacity of about 3,000,000 tons of steel a year.

Mr. Replogle is leaving Paris for London tomorrow, where he will confer with the British steel operators who requested him to prepare a solution for the stagnation which now paralyzes British industry. He declined to comment on the report when seen by a correspondent who had read the document and said that any further elucidation of the matter could only come after his conference with his colleagues in London during the coming week. Mr. Replogle is sailing back to New York on Sept. 10.

Asked to Draft Reorganization Plan.

From unquestionable sources the writer is informed that Mr. Replogle was approached by a group of British steel operators last year and requested to draft a document outlining the situation in the steel industry and indicating how the English production could be revived and modernized and enabled to compete with other nations.

Full approval has been given to Mr. Replogle to make the report by leading American operators. The view is taken in American steel circles that anything which can be done to increase prosperity in Britain will eventually react favorably to the United States by giving Britain a greater purchasing power. The United Kingdom and Canada are already America's two largest customers. The United States is not a raw steel exporter. American steel finds it way abroad in the form of finished or semi-finished articles such as automobiles, agricultural implements and the thousand and one other products of American factories.

Perhaps the most startling feature of Mr. Replogle's finding is the revelation that France, through the restitution of the "lost provinces," Alsace and Lorraine, has become since the war the world's greatest steel exporter. France exported 5,000,000 tons yearly in 1926, 1927 and 1928 and imported only 158,000 tons, leaving an average excess of exports over imports of 4,482,000 tons, which is an increase of nearly 1,000 per cent over her operations in 1913, the year before the war.

Great Britain exported an average of 3,794,000 tons for the three-year period 1926-27-28, but imported 3,706,000 tons a year during that period. This left an excess export balance of only 84,000 tons, a decrease of 97 per cent from the pre-war figures, the report discloses. Germany exported 4,609,000 tons, but imported 1,789,000, leaving an export balance of only 2,820,000 tons, a decrease of 52 per cent since 1913.

Belgium and the Saar Basin exported 4,224,000 tons, imported 686,000 tons, and had a net favorable export balance of 3,538,000 tons. Since the war the Saar production has been taken from Germany and credited to France as reparations for the French mines in the Lens and northern fields destroyed by the invading German armies before they retreated.

The United States in the three-year period exported 2,105,000 tons, imported 787,000 tons and had an excess export of 1,318,000 tons, a decrease of 45 per cent since 1913.

"Forty years ago England led the world in steel production," the report states. "In 1913 the world output of steel totaled 74,687,000 tons and in 1928 the total was 107,210,000 tons, an increase of 44 per cent."

Mr. Replogle points out, from the tables embraced in his report, that Britain imports almost 4,000,000 tons of steel annually at a cost of about £35,000,000 sterling [$1,704,500,000], thereby giving employment to about 250,000 workers of other countries, while about 2,000,000 of her own people are idle and on the dole.

"It would appear," the report says, "that she should export 5,000,000 tons in excess of her import, which is approximately what France is doing."

Mincing no words, Mr. Replogle examines the causes of Britain's decline in steel production and places his finger squarely on a touchy point when he says in the report that "one of the principal reasons is family management, which works for inefficiency and destroys the ambition and incentive of the worker in the ranks, and more particularly lack of initiative, and ultra-conservatism in failing to keep abreast of the times in installation of efficient manufacturing methods, and of persisting in regarding obsolete plants as assets when in reality they are liabilities."

This is a direct criticism of the British custom of maintaining property in the family with the father leaving it to the eldest son and he leaving it to his eldest son regardless of their interest, qualifications or ability to operate the property.

It also focuses on the vital point of machine installation for modern operation and of continuing to operate old-fashioned, ill-equipped plants without profit, or even at a loss, rather than modernize it to meet existing conditions in rival markets.

Blast Furnaces Held Poorest.

"Blast furnace practice in England is the weakest chain in the link," says the report, "statistics disclosing the average pig iron output per furnace being only 120 tons per day compared to 165 tons in Belgium, 170 tons in France, 310 tons in Germany and 600 tons in the United States, where the newest and largest blast furnaces produce as high as 1,200 tons daily."

The report quotes the figures compiled by the National Industrial Conference Board on what has been accomplished in American blast furnace operation by intensive mechanization and shows that comparing the years 1913 and 1928 the American workers' hours have been reduced 14.4 per cent, wages increased 96 per cent and average output of pig iron per man per hour of labor increased from .141 of a ton gross to .296 of a ton gross, an increase of 110 per cent. Average weekly earnings per man in the iron and steel industry in the United States in September, 1928, were $35.53, whereas in Britain they amounted to only $14.60.

"America's production of half the world's steel with highest wages of any country is due not so much to natural advantages as to the aggressive management and introduction of the most modern and efficient methods of mass production," the report says.

"As the United States possesses about 45 per cent of the known coal reserves and 42 per cent of the iron ores of the world, it is reasonable to suppose that she will always have a predominant place in the world steel market," he continues in the report. "But the position of Great Britain is also an enviable one, as she has vast deposits of iron ore estimated at 3,000,000,000 tons, and although much of this is low grade and supplies only about half her needs, there are greater possibilities in a more liberal use of native ores by concentration and enrichment.

"Her imports of ores amount to more than 5,000,000 tons annually, largely from Spain, Northern Africa and Sweden. These imported ores are of very high grade, the Swedish running to 67 per cent iron content. Sweden is now exporting about 8,500,000 tons of this rich ore annually, about 6,000,000 tons from the Kirima-Narvik mines alone, and about 90 per cent of these exports are going to Germany."

Coal and limestone are plentiful in England, the report asserts, and with complete electrification and modern mining and handling facilities they can be produced on a satisfactory basis.

"France is well supplied with ore from Alsace and Lorraine," the report goes on, "but lacks coal, whereas Germany and Belgium have plenty of coal but practically no ore. Spain, Sweden and Norway are rich in ores, but have no coal and Italy has small ore reserves in Elba but no coal."

Six Points in Recommendations.

Drastic conclusions are drawn by Mr. Replogle in the summary of his report and recommendations which set forth the following six points.

1. Practically all English blast furnaces are obsolete and should be scrapped and modern furnaces of 1,000 tons per day capacity should be installed.

2. The largest type Koppers or other by-product coke ovens with complete tar, gas, ammonia and other by-product recovery plants are an absolute necessity. A domestic market for any surplus gas should be available and recovery of these by-products should mean a saving of approximately $4 a ton of coke produced, as compared to the old bee-hive ovens without any by-product recoveries.

3. As about 2,500,000 tons, or 60 per cent of Britain's import, are in pig iron, blooms, millets, slabs, sheet and tin plate bars, and wire rods, it is obvious that these semi-finished products should receive first attention before following with plates, shapes and bars, which account for 1,200,000 tons, or 30 per cent of imports. This policy should result in least disturbance to existing finishing mills.

4. The main plant, if possible, should be located at seaboard with deep-water harbor and good fresh-water supply and preferably near the larger steel-consuming districts of England or Wales, although this is secondary to the deep harbor advantages of raw material assembly and export trade.

National Defense a Factor.

5. An important consideration in the increase of steel output of Britain is the factor of national defense. Germany and Austria entered the World War with an annual steel production of more than 21,000,000 tons, as compared to a combined total of less than 16,000,000 tons for Britain, France, Belgium and Italy. Had Germany been successful in preventing the enormous tonnages of munitions from America reaching the battle line her weight of metal might possibly have been a determining factor in her favor.

6. As civilization advances, the per capita consumption of steel increases in all countries. In the United States it has increased from 353 pounds per capita in 1908 to 959 pounds in 1929. The world's per capita consumption should continue to increase as in the past, so the future of the industry is on a sound basis. Britain should be prepared to participate to a greater extent than is possible under existing conditions, and with the enormous cost reductions which would result from adoption of the above plan their collateral interests, such as automobile manufacture, shipbuilding, &c., would be expected to expand, many thousands of workers now idle would be employed, a high degree of prosperity for England would ensue and the return from the necessarily large investment would be extremely satisfactory.

The writer is informed that, regardless of the outcome of the conferences which Mr. Replogle will have with the British steel magnates in London this week, it is now doubtful whether the modernization of the English steel industry can be begun soon, as had been the aim when he was asked to draft the report and prepare the plans last year.

The Wall Street slump and resulting financial tightness existing in the world money markets and the general uncertainty in big business conditions may necessitate a delay in the reorganization.

BRUENING PLEDGES A POLICY OF PEACE

STANDS BY STRESEMANN

Stresses Internal Consolidation as Prerequisite to Any Initiative in External Fields.

By GUIDO ENDERIS.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Aug. 31.—In the course of a campaign speech delivered at a meeting of the Centrist party at Trier today, Dr. Heinrich Bruening, the Chancellor, placed himself and his government on record as being unalterably opposed to any rash experiments in Germany's foreign policies.

It was the Chancellor's first specific reference to the present Cabinet's position on the issues which for the past few weeks have provoked considerable curiosity both here and abroad, especially since the Chancellor's Cabinet colleague and active adviser, Gottfried Treviranus, Minister for Occupied Areas, projected the discussion of the Polish Corridor and the Eastern frontier into the present campaign.

"No responsible German statesman would dream of involving the German people in a foreign adventure of any sort, and so long as Dr. Julius Curtius, the Foreign Minister, and I, by virtue of the Constitution, are solely responsible for the conduct of our foreign policies, I feel that our authority is sufficient to guarantee that no such adventures will be indulged in," Dr. Bruening declared.

Seen as Disavowal.

As Dr. Curtius also had gone on record in the course of the present campaign with an unqualified statement that no deviation would be made from the late Dr. Stresemann's line of foreign policy, which he stated was backed up by the majority of the German people, the position of the two government leaders may be taken as representing a frank disavowal of Herr Treviranus, whose continued references to "the open wound in the East" appear to have gotten on the nerves of both the Chancellor and the Foreign Minister.

Dr. Bruening's speech today was the first decisive reference in the course of his present campaigning to the government's foreign policy and was apparently intended to disperse suspicions that with the liberation of the Rhineland Germany was determined to strike a more aggressive note in her determination to effect the gradual revision of the Treaty of Versailles.

While the public statements of Herr Treviranus and the official utterances of other party leaders in the course of the campaign have afforded a basis for such implications, Chancellor Bruening today frankly admitted that until Germany had definitely consolidated her internal affairs she would be disabled from undertaking any definite initiative in the field of foreign policy.

Stresses Limitations.

"A striving for popularity does not serve the interests of our nation and a promise of quick results will not carry us forward," the Chancellor declared. "A responsible German foreign policy must calmly weigh the possibilities and power at our command and proceed within such limits. We cannot set up a definite program or aim, for these are solely determined by our situation in general, and on this point there can be no difference of opinion. We must seek to discover ways and means which will enable us to reach our goal.

"The most elementary prerequisites of a successful foreign policy are stability and continuity and the internal consequences they imply. Without their application a nation like Germany cannot hope to attain a firm and honorable position in her international relations."

In order to win confidence at home and abroad, the Chancellor believed, it was imperative that Germany steadfastly adhere to the fundamental principles of her present foreign policy, a course which, he said, could be pursued with firmness and energy.

Urges Internal Unity.

"But one thing is self-evident and an obvious prerequisite of our foreign policy, and that is the consolidation and stabilization of our internal conditions," Dr. Bruening continued. "A disunited Germany which cannot master its domestic affairs will also be unfitted to solve its foreign problems and therefore will be eliminated as a factor in impending important developments.

"We can only regain the position in international life to which we are entitled if we lay a firm foundation at home, thereby presenting to the world evidence that we are a determined and united people."

Referring to the impending pan-Europe discussions, Dr. Bruening reiterated the German Government's readiness to cooperate, in the belief that if the stabilization of European economy is to be achieved, the causes of the existing depression must be ruthlessly attacked, whether they are of an economic or a political origin.

"We sincerely hope that the pressing needs of the present day will produce a strong impulse for international cooperation, and that means for the peaceful adjustment of those problems which vitally affect German interests may also be found," the Chancellor stated.

Von Seeckt Seeks Seat.

General Hans von Seeckt, former chief of the Reichswehr, who is running for the Reichstag on the People's party ticket, is busy divesting himself of the secretiveness which has previously earned him the sobriquet of "the Sphinx." Talking at Dortmund today, he believed Germany should maintain peaceful and friendly relations with Italy and Russia, although she rejects the political principles of both States.

General von Seeckt demanded that the restrictions now imposed on the German army be removed and said the most important aim of Germany's foreign policy must be her restoration to the position of a world power befitting her size and importance. He favored reconciliation between nations and believed Germany had no reason to oppose European cooperation on the basis of Aristide Briand's proposals, provided he vouchsafed equality.

The General considered revision of the Treaty of Versailles indispensable to the restoration of German sovereignty and the pacification of Europe, and designated the Polish Corridor as a permanent menace to East Prussia.

With the election for the new Reichstag only two weeks off, all the major parties have now gone into action. The Socialists, who are conducting their campaign with their old-time routine, appear to be the most affluent of the more than a score of parties canvassing the electorate. The German labor party has added a fleet of five airplanes to its campaign machine. They will fly around Germany in the next two weeks droning out the Socialists' campaign slogan, which is, briefly, "Vote List No. 1," the Socialists being first on the official ballot. This is a strategic position, in view of the array of twenty-four parties which have already registered with the Federal election commissioner.

Sees France as Menace.

DORTMUND, Germany, Aug. 31 (AP).—Alleged expenditures by France of billions of francs on armaments were attacked as a menace to Germany by General von Seeckt in his speech here today.

At the same time he advocated cooperation with the "United States of Europe" scheme "just so long as German interests are upheld in it."

POLES DENOUNCE GERMANY.

Furious Demonstration in Warsaw Against Border Revision.

BERLIN, Aug. 31 (AP).—A furious anti-German demonstration in the principal square of Warsaw was reported tonight in dispatches of the Telegraphen Union Agency.

The demonstration rose from a meeting to protest against recent discussion of possible revision of the German-Polish frontier, which has awakened violent resentment in Poland since the speeches of the German Cabinet Minister, Gottfried Treviranus.

Cries of "Down with Germany!" and "Away with the Prussians!" rose in a roar. Crowds attempted to march to the German Legation, but were headed off by a strong force of police.

Similar anti-German demonstrations were reported by the Wolff Agency from Kattowitz and Lodz.

DISORDERS FEARED IN BUDAPEST TODAY

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BUDAPEST, Aug. 31.—The prospects of a clash between workers and police tomorrow loom larger in view of the placarding of the city last night of warnings by the Governor of Budapest against loitering in the streets during the Socialist protest demonstration against the failure of the government to provide any support for public works to give employment to the jobless.

The placards declare the protest procession has been forbidden, but the workers have announced their determination to make a "protest promenade" along some main street. The police are warning every one that they are forbidden to stand about or walk in groups, and the Governor says he is determined to enforce this order by every means, including physical force.

The city looks as if the most serious trouble were expected. Regular troops, a force of gendarmerie and Budapest policemen are stationed in all public buildings. Especially strong forces have been placed in telegraph and postal offices and around gas works and power stations. Armored cars are being kept in readiness to be dispatched to any part of the city at a moment's notice.

It is expected that 100,000 workers will take part in the demonstration, which will be the first big demonstration attempted by the workers since the counter-revolution of 1920.

As a reply to the workers' decision to hold an hour's protest strike beginning at 11 A. M. tomorrow, factory owners here have decided to close down their works for the entire day, thus depriving the demonstrators of a day's wages.

The Socialists have issued a statement declaring that Hungary is the only country in Europe besides Portugal and Turkey where no relief is afforded to the workers by municipal governments. They assert the demonstration is to be absolutely orderly and the workers will merely walk through the streets and attract the attention of the public to the treatment of unemployed problems. If police do not provoke disorders, there will be none, the Socialists say. Nevertheless, considerable nervousness prevails in all quarters of the city.

average person by stating that France in 1929, when all of her financial and commercial transactions with other countries, both governmental and private, are taken into consideration, made a net profit as "a going concern" of 13,150,000,000 francs, due allowance being made for all foreign debt payments.

Pre-War Total Far Exceeded.

Just what this means can be realized in considering the figures for 1913—the last pre-war year—when France occupied her normal place among the creditor nations of the world. That year the favorable balance of accounts was 830,000,000 francs of pre-war value ($166,000,000). In 1928 this balance had risen to 5,720,000,000 francs, so that last year's record is double that of the previous year.

While the present world economic crisis will probably cause a diminution, it must be borne in mind that France, almost alone among the important nations of the world, has until quite recently been able to escape the evil consequences of the depression.

With these figures as a basis, M. Meynial goes on to point out that France last year more than tripled the return she was accustomed to receive before the war from her foreign investments and other international operations.

These figures, it is further asserted, explain clearly the flow of gold to this country in the past eighteen months and also why the franc, which four years ago appeared to be going the same road as the mark, has lately stood at a premium over both the dollar and the pound.

In an effort to throw more light upon his conclusions, the economist has drawn up a table of figures showing net balances in the various chief categories of payments made by or to France in the period considered.

Thus on the credit side appears the following: Net receipts from the French shipping trade, after deducting freight charges for French goods carried in foreign bottoms, 3,100,000,000 francs; insurance premiums paid to French companies by foreign shippers on goods in transit, 500,000,000 francs; interest paid to French holders of foreign securities, 5,500,000,000 francs; expenditures by foreign tourists, after deducting French tourists' expenditures in foreign countries, 8,500,000,000 francs; yield from German and other reparation payments, 6,700,000,000 francs; French loans issued abroad, 200,000,000 francs; sales of foreign exchange bills &c. by the Bank of France, 6,550,000,000 francs.

On the debit side: Adverse balance of visible French foreign trade, that is to say excess of imports over exports after deducting exchanges between France and her colonies as internal trade, 10,000,000,000 francs: foreign debt payments by the government, 2,850,000,000 francs; estimated sum sent out of France by foreign workers, 2,500,000,000 francs; foreign loans issued to France, 1,100,000,000 francs; purchases of foreign exchange by the Treasury, 1,450,000,000 francs.

Answering the natural question as to what becomes of this huge amount of increased wealth, M. Meynial asserts that the greater part of it—8,500,000,000 francs—was transferred into gold, this being the actual amount by which the Bank of France's reserve increased last year. The remainder—4,650,000,000 francs—M. Meynial regards as representing the amount of French foreign investments in the past year, inclusive of the 1,100,000,000 francs in foreign loans already mentioned.

French foreign loans last year included $22,000,000 of a Rumanian loan sold to bankers at 84 and to the public at 88, which was equal to the export of 480,000,000 francs in French savings; several Belgian mining issues and an issue of the Swedish match trust.

It will be seen that M. Meynial's statistical conclusions are not out of harmony with the official French explanation of the rise in the gold reserve, which places the greatest emphasis upon, first, the restoration of confidence, which has built up France's credit abroad, and, second, France's privileged position with respect to the world economic crisis, thereby tending to draw money to France.

Now that the reserves are rapidly approaching 50,000,000,000 francs, there are increasing signs that the government intends to embark actively upon a policy which will insure for France her place as one of the three great financial markets of the world.

From governmental sources it is explained that, rather than encouraging the increase in reserves, steps are being taken to discourage a further rise and even to reduce the present amount, because of the effect upon the national circulation, which tends to mount with each influx of gold. The 1,000,000,000-franc reduction in taxes on foreign securities passed by the last session of Parliament has not yet had the effect anticipated, namely, the encouragement of French investors to buy abroad and thus bring back the exports of gold through the acquisition of foreign securities. Good results are expected, however, when the Bourse trading recovers its normal activity.

That France would welcome some kind of collaboration with Britain for mutual development of their respective financial credit markets is clearly indicated in an article in Excelsior. The writer, who speaks upon the authority of important French financiers, refers to the uneasiness in the City of London over the rising gold reserves and then devotes some space to what he alleges to be the apparently successful efforts of British bankers to block the activities of French bankers who are now seeking an outlet for the excess French capital in the Balkans, the Baltic States and Scandinavian countries.

He finds this is not especially surprising in view of London's long domination of world finance, but points out that the situation is now changed. Britain, he says, must realize that she now shares that privilege with two other powers—France and the United States.

"How much more logical and simple," he concludes, "would be collaboration between the markets of Paris and London for the distribution of international credits. But it goes without saying that this collaboration must be based upon strict equality of moral and material advantages, since French gold, being now much more plentiful than British, would assume the larger risk."

SCHISMS INTERFERE IN A BY-ELECTION

LLOYD GEORGE TO SPEAK

Liberals' Hopes Aroused by Move of United Empire Group to Cut Into Tory Strength.

By CHARLES A. SELDEN.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 31.—Whatever the results may be of Tuesday's voting in the Parliamentary by-election in Bromley, the comic campaign there has proved that England's newest political organization, the United Empire party, has at least one thing in common with the three old parties. It is split wide open by a quarrel between the leaders.

There is a Conservative party schism due to the efforts of Lord Beaverbrook and Lord Rothermere to oust Stanley Baldwin from the leadership. The Liberals are divided between David Lloyd George and Viscount Grey of Fallodon. The Labor party is tormented by its radical Left Wing, which, so far as practical political results are concerned, has become a separate party. Now Lord Beaverbrook and Lord Rothermere are at odds in the management of the very Empire organization which they created primarily as a machine to ruin Mr. Baldwin.

A serious feature of the thing is that the result of the voting may give some indication of the progress of the movement to overthrow Mr. Baldwin and also show the public reaction to the various agencies now working to convert England into a protective tariff country. But the campaign itself is as ridiculous as that of Big Bill Devery for the Mayoralty of New York years ago or the political fight of Samuel Slumkey versus Horatio Fizkin in the Eatanswill election as recorded by Mr. Pickwick.

In addition to the three candidates of the Conservative, Liberal and Labor parties, a fourth contestant was put up by Lord Rothermere as the nominee of the United Empire party.

At the last general election the Conservatives won this constituency in a three-cornered fight by a safe majority of 7,000. It is doubtful if Lord Rothermere's man can cut into that margin sufficiently to defeat the present Tory candidate by throwing the election to the Liberal, but that is the only point on which there is any speculation.

Mr. Lloyd George thinks the chance is so good that he is going into the district tomorrow night to make a speech for the Liberal nominee on the eve of the voting. Mr. Lloyd George's daughter already has been campaigning there, thus giving to the Liberals the benefit of a picturesque element which the United Empire party had hoped to monopolize by having Miss Amy Johnson, who flew to Australia, come there to speak for its candidate.

So much resentment was aroused by using the national heroine in a partisan fight of this character that Miss Johnson was suddenly withdrawn after the Rothermere papers had made a great splurge over her as the champion of the "party of youth" which was going to have not only Bromley and England but the entire British Empire.

Lord Beaverbrook has broken entirely with Lord Rothermere and day after day never mentions the Bromley campaign in his newspapers. Lord Beaverbrook went away on his yacht when the campaign reached its height and instead of getting some word of encouragement from him about the desirability of taxing foreign foods the United Empire party candidate has learned only that Lord Beaverbrook has been ill aboard his yacht from eating food, the origin of which was not stated.

Not only does Lord Beaverbrook refuse to back the United Empire party candidate but he tried to support the Conservative nominee and was snubbed for his pains when he stipulated that the nominee should repudiate Mr. Baldwin if the latter did not eventually endorse the plan for putting a tariff on foreign foods.

The public explanation for the split of the two lords is that Lord Beaverbrook wanted to adhere to a one-track policy of free empire trade with a tariff against the outside world, but Lord Rothermere insisted on converting the organization into a party committed to discarding all the recent progressive efforts of the Conservative and Labor Governments in regard to India and Egypt and to the wielding of the British big stick on those countries.

ISMET PASHA SHARP IN REPUBLIC'S DEFENSE

Premier Contrasts Rail Building Under Empire at Opening of Sivas-Angora Road.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ISTANBUL, Aug. 31.—Premier Ismet Pasha of Turkey delivered a sharp speech at Sivas, Anatolia, after the opening of the new Turkish-built railroad connecting Sivas with Angora. Premier Ismet mentioned that Republican Turkey in seven years had built nearly half the amount of railways in Anatolia as the Sultan's government had built in sixty years.

Referring to the vexed question of foreign capital working in Turkey, he said that many instances had convinced him that foreign capitalists were bent on trying to regain the unfair privileges they had enjoyed under the Ottoman Empire and that republican Turkey preferred to rely on her own resources and retain her independence.

He tried to justify the fact that 45 per cent of Turkey's budget is being spent on national defence by challenging his critics to show another way in which Turkey's security could be assured. He asserted the present government's policy of monopolizing the sale of tobacco, salt, alcohol and other products was best suited to a country like Turkey and that without the revenues derived from these monopolies railways could not be built.

He enumerated many other advantages which he considered that his government had bestowed on the country, saying he did not cling to power, but that it would be cowardly of him to desert his post in the face of difficulties.

The speech was mainly a reiteration of what Premier Ismet has so often preached—namely, a policy of "Turkey for the Turks." It would not appear that the creation of a new liberal republican party by Ali Fethi Bey, former Ambassador to Paris, had caused the government to alter its policy. Fechi advocated the free entry of foreign capital into Turkey and the furtherance of private business at the expense of State enterprise. It is expected that Fethi will now reply to Premier Ismet's speech.

AUSTRIAN ARMY SHUNS VIENNA'S HOSPITALITY

VIENNA, Aug. 31.—The length to which party bitterness is carried in Austria and the political character given to her fighting forces is shown in the army's sharp refusal of an invitation to enjoy Vienna's hospitality issued to the troops taking part in the Autumn manoeuvres around the city by Dr. Karl Seitz, its Mayor.

The refusal, announced to the press by clerical party headquarters, gives as ground the bitterness of past Socialist attacks on the policy of Karl Vaugoin, Vice Chancellor and Defense Minister, and other clericals accused of reviving imperialist traditions in the Republican army. The Democratic and moderate Conservative newspapers deplore the flat rejection of the olive branch extended by Dr. Seitz.

The invitation was for the troops to dine as guests of the capital at Vienna's famous Rathaus and receive free street car passes. It was refused in a long letter published today and signed by the officers and warrant officers elected under Herr Vaugoin's system as committeemen.

The clerical headquarters announce simultaneously that Herr Vaugoin has arranged that the troops be entertained in Vienna at public cost and receive 5,000 free tickets to the State Opera, theatres and motion picture houses.

STRIKE RIOTING IN ADELAIDE

ADELAIDE, Australia, Aug. 31 (AP).—The South Australian Cabinet has been in almost continuous session for several days in an effort to untangle a series of waterfront troubles which have brought on the threat of a general strike.

The waterfront, quiet for a short time since former troubles were adjusted, has lately been the sector of renewed rioting. Volunteer workers have been attacked for several days, mobs attempting to stop them from loading ships.

The Cabinet, it was announced, was making all necessary preparations to meet whatever emergency might arise, and it was said the public services would be maintained.

BOMBAY IS ORDERLY AT FLAG CEREMONY

MILL PICKETS FIRED UPON

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BOMBAY, Aug. 31.—Thousands of Mahatma Gandhi's followers joined a demonstration in defiance of British rule today when a "flag salutation" ceremony organized by the Congress committee took place on the Maidan Esplanade.

The mass salute of the nationalist flag took place quietly without bloodshed, but this was attributed to a warning by the chief magistrate yesterday that if it were held within sight of Indian infantry regiments it would likely lead to a breach of the peace. The demonstration was held where all Congress meetings are held, on that part of the Esplanade remote from the infantry lines.

From early this morning singers of nationalist songs began to pour toward Maidan from all parts of the city, together with a great variety of volunteer organizations and a number of civil disobedience leaders who had just arrived in Bombay on their release from prison. At 8 o'clock Mrs. Kamdar, who has been nominated for president of the Congress War Council, hoisted the nationalist flag, which was greeted by a roar of cheers. Then she silently saluted it and the crowd dispersed without any police interference.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

CALCUTTA, Aug. 31.—Inspector General Lowman of the Bengal police died this morning following his shooting by a Hindu youth at Dacca on Friday morning. Superintendent Hodson of the Dacca police, who was wounded at the same time, is recovering after a collapse which caused fears that he was dying.

BOMBAY, Aug. 31 (AP).—The police fired upon a mob of riotous workers opposite the New City mills here today, injuring several. The disturbance started when a number of employes from other mills gathered at the New City mills, which have been working, and urged the operatives to cease work. When they refused, the crowd pelted the mill with stones and the management appealed to the police for protection.

The police first charged the crowds with long clubs and then opened fire, quelling the disturbance.

The two peacemakers, Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru and M. Jayakar, continued today their conversations with Pandit Motilal and Jawaharlal Nehru in Naini jail at Allahabad. The Nehrus gave Sapru and Jayakar a note for Mahatma Gandhi, which will be taken to the Nationalist chieftain at Yeroda prison in Poona.

The newspaper Pioneer says that the key to settlement of India's strife is in the hands of Jawaharlal Nehru, and that if he can be won over the additional negotiations with Gandhi should be comparatively easy.

QUEEN WILHELMINA IS 50.

Hears Speeches in Dutch East Indies 8,000 Miles Away on Radio.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

THE HAGUE, Aug. 31.—Cities and towns throughout Holland were beflagged and illuminated today for Queen Wilhelmina's fiftieth birthday.

The Dutch colonies also participated in the rejoicings and at Batavia a crowd of 60,000 listened to speeches which were broadcast to the royal family at Het Loo castle, 8,000 miles away. Later the Queen went to the microphone and thanked all who had celebrated her birthday.

Manor

Prior to the industrial revolution the manorial system was in vogue over the civilized world. The lord of the manor held complete sway. His right was a right of land. Life and death is no longer the land-owner's province, but to this day a land-owner commands the respect of his fellows as does no other. Land is the basis of all wealth.

The Ideal of a Craftsman

In every age men have striven with untiring patience for the achievement of an ideal. The name "STRADIVARIUS" on a violin immortalizes a master craftsman who lived true to his ideals.

Making a cigar of the finest quality was the ideal upon which in 1874, at Manchester, N. H., Roger G. Sullivan—starting with one cigar maker—founded 7-20-4. Today because of its ideal quality, 7-20-4 has grown to the largest hand-made cigar industry in the World.

Quality workmanship and the finest tobaccos are traditional with 7-20-4. The unswerving tenet of its founder—to keep faith with the public—has remained unchanged for over half a century. It is this firm principle which today refuses to alter that method of manufacture which has made 7-20-4 Cigar—FAMOUS FOR ITS CHOICE QUALITY.

GOVERNOR INSPECTS RIVER POWER SITES

BODY ALLOCATES DUTIES

Prof. R. M. Haig of Columbia to Determine Question of Public or Private Development.

MASSENA, N. Y., Aug. 31.—Governor Roosevelt and the members of the Water Power Commission made a personal inspection today of proposed sites for the development of St. Lawrence River hydroelectric sources.

They toured the river aboard the Inspector, the Governor's yacht, and later viewed some of the rapids from the shore.

The commission, which held an organization meeting yesterday at Ogdensburg, formally got down to work during the day and allocated various tasks to each of the members to perform in preparation for the next meeting to be held in New York City on Sept. 15.

The activities of the commissioners on the trip were confined to making a preliminary survey, but they and the Governor expressed satisfaction with the results thus far obtained and again predicted speedy utilization of the river's water power if partisan politics could be avoided.

The commission appointed to determine the feasibility of public as opposed to private development of St. Lawrence River power is headed by Professor Robert M. Haig of Columbia.

It was determined that Representative Frederick M. Davenport would examine those phases of the work relating to the Federal Government, while former Lieut. Gov. Thomas M. Conway would deal with the municipal aspects of the project. Julius Henry Cohen will handle the legal side and Samuel J. Fuller, New York banker, will do the preliminary financial work.

Party Views the Rapids.

The Governor, Mrs. Roosevelt, Colonel and Mrs. Frederick Stuart Greene, State Engineer Thomas Farrell, Samuel I. Rosenman, counsel to the Governor, and the commission members left aboard the Inspector from Ogdensburg this morning. They came down the river to Waddington after lying off shore for several hours while the commission members conferred and consulted with the Governor.

At Waddington the party viewed the rapids. At the South Saulte Rapids, one of the proposed sites, the Governor and the commissioners posed for a talking picture and the Governor outlined the main features of the power project.

The entire development, the Governor explained, was expected to produce about 2,000,000 horsepower. Two plans have been presented for harnessing this power—a one-stage dam plan offered by the Americans and a two-stake plan presented by the Canadians.

The members of the commission motored on here with the Governor to the home of Allen B. Cook, father of Nancy Cook, friend of Mrs. Roosevelt, where they were guests at a reception. They dispersed at the close of the reception, to meet again in New York City.

The Governor went back to Waddington to spend the night on the Inspector, and tomorrow will journey to Democrat Hill for a brief visit.

Church Gets Garfield Funeral Flag.

LONG BRANCH, N. J., Aug. 31.—An American flag, with forty-two stars, which once covered the coffin of President Garfield, was presented to the Church of the Presidents, Elberon, at the annual President Garfield memorial service held at the church yesterday. President Garfield was one of seven Presidents who worshiped at the famous old church.

CRAIN TO RECEIVE FOOD INQUIRY DATA

HE SUMMONS TRUCKMAN

Will Investigate This Week Reports That Fish Dealers Plan to Increase Prices.

Assistant Attorney General William B. Groat announced last night that he would turn over to District Attorney Crain this week a complete transcript of the testimony taken at the State's food profiteering investigation, with the suggestion that Mr. Crain proceed as he deems best on the question of obtaining indictments. Mr. Groat said there was no doubt that the testimony produced by witnesses during the last two weeks justified punitive measures.

The Attorney General's decision followed conferences with the District Attorney's office and the recent promise of Assistant District Attorney Albert B. Unger that a move for indictments would be made immediately upon the receipt of such a suggestion from Mr. Groat. The District Attorney's office has been following closelv the testimony on food racketeering before Mr. Groat, with Assistant District Attorney Joyce reporting to Mr. Crain on all hearings.

Flour Truckman Called.

A summons has been issued on orders of Mr. Groat against Izzy Burkman, flour truckman, to appear in Tombs Court tomorrow on a charge of assault. At least two trucking groups have been accused before the Attorney General as being groups designed in restraint of trade. An organization of flour jobbers and an association of milk dealers have also been named as having monopolistic influences with price-fixing power, but Mr. Groat has not revealed whether the Attorney General will move for the dissolution of these groups under the provisions of the Donnelly act.

Reports that some fish dealers intend to take advantage of approaching religious holidays to profitteer has decided the Attorney General to take up the new line of investigation when the State's food inquiry resumes on Wednesday morning.

"I am told that fish dealers are ready to wax rich at the expense of our Jewish citizenry, who will soon observe their religious holidays," Mr. Groat explained. "W eintend to run down any conspiracy there may be to raise fish prices at a time when fish, more than at any other period in the year, is such an important item of the daily diet."

Cites Benefits of Inquiry.

Mr. Groat said that to amplify his statement further might tend to "put the guilty persons on their guard."

"The widespread publicity through the Attorney General's office and other agencies and the attitude of the newspapers has served to discourage food profiteering," Mr. Groat added. "When our investigation started two weeks ago, there was ample evidence of unjustified high prices for food everywhere. We have succeeded in exposing some of these racketeers and this disclosure has in turn helped to spoil the racket of many others. Many millions of dollars have been saved to the city's consumers due to lower food prices which have become effective and we hope and believe that before our hearings end other beneficial results to the public will result."

Maintains Innocence of Attack.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., Aug. 31.—Still denying that he has any knowledge of the hammer attack upon Miss Ida Engberg, 17 years old, last Monday night near Katonah, Albert Palmgren, 25, was in the county jail here today. He has been cross-examined at the Bedford town jail by the State police, Stamford police, the Bedford town police and Assistant District Attorney Walter Ferris. At the Northern Westchester Hospital tonight it was said that Miss Engberg had a fair chance to recover.

FRANK FAY CHATS AND SINGS AT PALACE

Hailed at His Homecoming From Hollywood—Harriet Hoctor and Harry Fox on Lively Bill.

To make a homecoming for Frank Fay, they have assembled at the Palace this week a program whose general pace and ample entertainment are in keeping with the holiday nature of a Broadway hero's return. A lively and good-humored carnival, largely devoted to comedy, it spends approximately two hours preparing for the closing spot devoted to Mr. Fay, who, of course, immediately appropriates the theatre and its audience with a long-remembered skill. Preceding him there are, for instance, Harriet Hoctor, Harry Fox, Beatrice Curtis, Tess Gardella, Johnny Burke and Borrah Minnevitch and his harmonica-playing gamins. They all do their duty and furnish a great entrance.

Established, as he has been for so long, among the elect of Broadway's favorites, Mr. Fay comes back from the Hollywood temples with the style and assurance that made him a commanding headliner wherever the vaudeville or revue business is practiced. His hesitating delivery and deceptive informality are no less superb and authoritative than they ever were. His change of pace from a nonsensical monologue to the emotion of a "torch song" is still remarkable showmanship. No one is more convulsive than he in the daft recital of an imaginary scenario, nor is any one quite as expert in the use of incidental business. So Mr. Fay chats amiably of airplane travel and the loonier movie plots, exchanges banter with his pianist, affects mild surprise at the laughter of his audience and sings a heartfelt song or two with conviction. There is, as you may have gathered by now, no one quite like him.

Returning after a short vaudeville tour since her recent Palace engagement, Miss Hoctor again evokes considerable enthusiasm with the ballet routines that have graced Mr. Ziegfeld's saturnalias. Tess Gardella, employed under the title of Aunt Jemima in the same Mr. Ziegfeld's late "Show Boat," resoundingly fills the music hall with the sentiments common to popular ballads, and comes on again toward the end of Mr. Fay's act. Harry Fox and Beatrice Curtis recite other pleasant songs to each other, and the Minnevitch harmonica chapter proves a hit act. Other entertainers include Johnny Burke, in his wartime monologue; Dick Nash and Midgie Fately, who dance and rope, and the team of Vardel and Vardel, who are here and there about the stage in an acrobatic session.

Mary Haynes and the Long Tack Sam Company lead the entertainment this week at Loew's State.

PORT NORRIS, N. J., Aug. 31.—The first oysters of the new season's crop, thanks to the "R" in September, will be harvested in the Maurice River Cove beds here tomorrow. The dredging season will not get into full swing for some time, however, since the oyster market does not generally become active until colder weather.

Though oysters were one of the very few crops benefited by the drought, the harvest is expected to be light because no seed oysters from the natural beds in Delaware Bay were planted three years ago. Three years is the normal period permitted a seed oyster to develop.

BRADY PLANS SERIES OF SUNDAY FORUMS

Debates on Politics, Literature and Religion to Be Held—First to Be Oct. 12.

ALSO TO GIVE SHORT PLAYS

Competition With Sunday Movies a Prime Consideration—"Cafe" Closes Brief Run.

William A. Brady announced yesterday that in October he would turn the stage of the Playhouse over to a series of Sunday evening discussions, in which public opinion would be given an opportunity for expression in liberal fashion. He plans to start the series on Oct. 12, with a discussion of the accomplishments of the League of New York Theatres. Mr. Brady said he would invite Harlow D. Savage, executive secretary of the league; Arthur Hopkins, John McBride and other organizers to speak.

Mr. Brady asserted that the "Playhouse Forum," as he intends to call the project, would not be restricted to theatrical matters. For the second event, on Oct. 19, he plans to arrange a debate among Heywood Broun, Mrs. Ruth Pratt, and Magistrate Louis B. Brodsky, opposing candidates for Congress. Mr. Broun's acceptance has already been received. On Oct. 26 the guest speaker will probably be Hannen Swaffer, the English dramatic critic, who is expected to be in the city about that time.

The discussions will, it is planned, be an hour in length, each speaker being limited to fifteen or twenty minutes. By previous invitation and arrangement, according to Mr. Brady, who will be chairman of each evening, speakers representing both sides of public questions will have the opportunity to debate on political, literary and religious subjects. It is planned to supplement the hours of the "Playhouse Forum" with programs of music, dancing and short plays.

Mr. Brady said yesterday that the forum project came frankly from a desire to keep his theatre open seven nights a week, so that it could compete with motion pictures and vaudeville. He added that the Sunday night ban of the Actors' Equity Association did not extend to short plays and that, if the legality of the enterprise came into consideration under the Sunday law, he "invited arrest."

"Café," the play by Marya Mannes, which Mr. Brady presented at the Ritz Theatre on Thursday, closed there Saturday night after four Broadway performances. The play dealt with Americans in the Latin Quarter of Paris. Mr. Brady said yesterday that he believed the subject of "Café" was fine, fresh dramatic material and that he hoped soon to produce another play on the same theme.

DR. WICKS SEES PERIL IN IDEALS OF PROFIT

URGES NEW TYPE OF LEADER

Warning that unemployment is the natural outgrowth of our commercial system which fosters economic competition and the ideals of profit rather than service, the Rev. Dr. Robert R. Wicks, dean of the Princeton University Chapel, in his sermon as guest preacher at the Brick Presbyterian Church, Thirty-seventh Street and Fifth Avenue yesterday urged the congregation to face the moral issues that lie at the bottom of our present economic struggle.

"On this day before Labor Day," Dr. Wicks said, "let us try to face squarely the moral issues that lie at the bottom of the great economic struggle which involves us all. The widespread unemployment and the widespread fear of it are symptoms of a situation which at least can have no Christian justification.

"The main issue can be expressed in these words of Jesus, 'No man can serve two masters!' We are trying to live a Christian life in a social order which gives the self-seeking profit motive the dominant position. We are trying to be brotherly on a fighting basis. And as Jesus predicted that kind of struggle is proving harder than driving a camel through the eye of a needle.

"In other words two distinct ways of life are struggling for supremacy. One is the commercial way. It orders life's motives thus: first acquire possessions, then seek such power and position as these can give and if possible, cooperate with others to perform some useful function in society.

"The other way of life is the creative way: First perform with all others some necessary function in society; then be ready for whatever power and position such usefulness brings and acquire, if possible, such necessary possessions as service permits.

"These two ways are inextricably mixed, the creative way cropping up in the commercial world and the commercial way creeping in to corrupt our creative and professional life. Both of them often struggle together in the same individual, but they are distinct and their results work out in far apart directions.

"For well more than 100 years the commercial way has had the upper hand in our western world. The World War was its logical result. Since then the cooperative, creative way has been capturing attention. The conflict at this point is the main issue in our civilization."

Dr. Wicks pointed out that our commercialism is a passing phase of civilization.

"Our commercial system has tended to develop the domineering type of individual," Dr. Wicks said. "He likes to manage things for people not with them. Back of his action is that idea of dominance. The leaders of the future will be the coordinators who can bring out and connect the resources of many different folks, not to pile up cash in their own pockets. This will be so because men will not work their best for leaders whom they suspect of profiteering."

SEES TASK FOR RELIGION.

Rev. R. J. Clinchy Says It Must Help Solve Economic Problems.

The supreme task of religion is to develop a conscience which is in accord with the mind and spirit of Jesus, the Rev. Russell J. Clinchy declared in his sermon yesterday morning at the Broadway Tabernacle Church, 211 West Fifty-sixth Street.

"This religious conscience will also be scientific in its search for ways and means through which a more just and merciful order of society may be established," he said. "We must learn how to make our human adjustments of race and creed and personality without friction. We must distribute wealth more equitably. We must devise a system of insurance for periods of enforced unemployment, and we must learn how to grant old age pensions so that the future of men and women may be faced with joy and not horror."

URGES LIFE OF THE SPIRIT.

"The difference between the man of the world and the man of God is that the former attempts to make the best use of the old nature, or the flesh, while the latter casts off the old nature and puts on the new, or the spirit," said the Rev. Dr. Morris Morris of Australia in his sermon yesterday morning at the Washington Heights Baptist Church, Convent Avenue and 145th Street.

"We overcome the old nature not by fighting it but by abiding in Christ. However high we may soar on the wings of sanctification, we never get beyond the reach of temptation." Dr. Morris concluded by citing astronomical and physiological evidence to prove his contention that harmony in nature is best secured by the opposition of contraries.

HURLEY STUDIES WATERWAY

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Aug. 31 (AP).—Secretary Hurley tonight received the first suggestion from business interests for the expansion of inland waterways as he prepared to start tomorrow for an inspection by boat of Mississippi River projects from this city to the Gulf of Mexico.

Accompanied by a group representing local interests, the Secretary of War inspected the St. Paul terminal used by the Waterways Corporation. His companions suggested study of a plan to double the size of the terminal, which is owned by the city.

Jobless Millions Show Our Social Plan Fails, Rev. J. H. Smith Says, Urging Golden Rule

Something is radically wrong with a social and economic system that throws millions of men out of employment periodically and that is bent more on preserving the principle of profit than that of social welfare, declared the Rev. J. Herbert Smith in his sermon in Calvary Episcopal Church, Twenty-first Street and Fourth Avenue, yesterday.

Only by making social welfare the true object of our scheme of things and fortifying our policies with Christian principles can we solve the social problems pressing upon us, Mr. Smith said.

The ruthless discharging of masses of employes, the vagaries of the so-called business cycle, the heartless application of so-called efficiency methods, the scrapping of men over forty years old for younger ones without regard to the individual and social suffering involved, the inability of our industrial system to maintain an even keel, all show that something is radically wrong with the present social order, he said.

"When we see nation pitted against nation in ruthless competition, when we see in our national business world a spirit of getting the other fellow before he gets you, I wonder," he continued. "I believe there is something wrong with a social structure which is built on distrust, self-interest and unfair competition. Men say that Christ's Golden Rule is not for this age, but I refuse to believe it until at least I have seen it given a chance to prove itself.

"Some tell you the reason for the present condition is the recent stock market crash. Others suggest the late Hoover tariff revision. These may play their part, but whatever the cause the only remedy lies in the religion of Jesus."

DR. FOULKES PRAISES DR. WYLIE'S CAREER

The Rev. Dr. William Hiram Foulkes, pastor of the Old First Presbyterian Church of Newark and vice president of the International Society of Christian Endeavor, in his sermon yesterday morning at the Central Presbyterian Church, Park Avenue and Sixty-fourth Street, eulogized the late Rev. Dr. David G. Wylie, president of the Lord's Day Alliance of the United States, who died at Stony Brook last Tuesday afternoon. Dr. Foulkes characterized Dr. Wylie as an "exponent of great moral issues and as an enemy of injustice and unkindness in high and low places."

Dr. Foulkes took for his text Acts, xxvii, 13-14, "And when the south wind blew softly, supposing they had obtained their purpose, they weighed anchor and sailed, but after no long time there beat down a tempestous wind called Euroclydon."

"The south wind," he said, "is the God of the modern world. 'Blow softly' is the essence of its liturgy and its litany. The prodigious modern development of the physical sciences, with the comparable growth of means of transportation and communication, has found such a wealth of creative comforts in the lap of humanity as would make the opulent ancients appear like paupers.

"It is not the business of religion, let it be said, to decry the south winds. Let them blow softly as long as they may! Religion has no right to be a kill-joy. The Christian religion has suffered no little at the hands of those who make God's world a caricature of God's love because they find gloom, not gladness.

"Let the south winds blow! The winds of youth, with its sweet dreams of affluence and achievement! Yet as sure as life lasts, the barometer will fall. The rugged and threatening north wind will have its arm. What then?

"What are the sanctions of Christian faith when prosperity shrivels and only the bleak bones of adversity stand out stark and stiff? Just this, that there is a Master's hand upon the helm if we will let Him have control.

"Let this be our lesson, that the soul unable to carry its prosperity will not overcome its adversity."

HOLDS FAITH LABOR'S HOPE

Rev. G. W. Mattice Urges Church to Face Workers' Problems.

The Church that follows Christ and claims Him as its Master must speak up and face the labor problems of our day, declared the Rev. Gordon W. Mattice in his Labor Day sermon at the Fort Washington Presbyterian Church, 174th Street and Broadway, yesterday.

"The words of the Hebrew prophet Micah suggest how this may be done," he said. "Every man and woman must have a real opportunity to reach the highest spiritual, mental and physical perfection of which he is capable. Any one who sanctions or places an unnecessary barrier in the pathway of his brother's progress is an unjust man. Henry Ford is a leader in the attempt to give the worker a fair deal. He is showing that deep faith, conviction in the practicability of righteousness, justice and humanity can be practiced in industry. Our labor problems must be given compassionate treatment by the Church.

"The Church must lead men to get right with God, in order that they can get right with men. Labor will never be just to capital so long as it is wrong with God—capital will never be merciful with labor so long as it is wrong with God. Christ and His Church are the greatest hope American labor has. Let it follow Him to the more abundant life, and to national prosperity based on a humble walking and fellowship with God."

POLISH LEGION MEETS HERE

300 Delegates Attend Mass and Hold Business Session in Bronx.

The third annual convention of the Polish Legion of the American Army was held yesterday in the Bronx Central Palace, 705 Courtlandt Avenue. More than 300 delegates from posts in New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Connecticut attended, including a general mobilization of the membership from the metropolitan area.

The delegates assembled at 9 A. M. and a half hour later, under command of Captain B. T. Anuskewicz, national commander of the Legion, marched to St. Adelbert's Church in 156th Street, the Bronx, where a mass was held in commemoration of their comrades who were killed in the World War.

At the business session which followed the mass addresses were made by Representative Anthony J. Griffin, Captain Anuskewicz, the Rev. Felix Burant, chaplain of the Legion, Conrad Hajko, representing the Veterans of the Polish Army; W. Stinberg, president of the Bronx United Polish Societies; J. Glowacki, representing the Polish National Alliance of Brooklyn; H. Kawecki, representing the Polish Democratic Clubs; Roosevelt Cair, representing the Bronx Spanish-American War Veterans; Z. Dattner of the Gdynia-America Line, Commander T. Schaeffer of the Bronx County American Legion posts, the Rev. F. Szubinski and several representatives of Polish-American newspapers.

RELIGION IS CHIEF RULE OF LIFE, SAYS MACKAY

Religion is the primary principle of life and spiritual faith only can assure success in this life, the Rev. Dr. John R. MacKay of Salt Lake City declared in his last sermon yesterday at the Rutgers Presbyterian Church, Broadway and Seventy-third Street.

Deploring the lack of interest in religion, Dr. MacKay said that "the man who is willing to step aside and investigate is the man who gets results."

"The only difference between Jesus Christ and us," he continued, "is that wherever Christ looked or wherever His mind exercised itself He saw and thought of God, while we do not see or even look for Him unless we are sick. Then we hunt Him."

Dr. MacKay quoted Steinmetz's answer to Roger Babson when the latter asked Steinmetz shortly before his death what the next great change in the world's affairs would be. Steinmetz replied:

"Some day people will learn that material things do not bring happiness and are of little use in making men and women creative and powerful. Then the scientists of the world will turn their laboratories over to the study of God and prayer, and the spiritual forces which as yet have hardly been scratched. When this day comes the world will see more advancement in one generation than it has in the past 400 years."

Dr. MacKay was formerly pastor of North Presbyterian Church, 525 West 155th Street. He is now Professor of Psychology and Religion at Westminster College, Salt Lake City, Utah.

200,000 BELGIANS AT CHURCH FESTIVAL

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MALINES, Belgium, Aug. 31.—Sixty-nine trains brought 200,000 people, including peasants and factory workers, to this city today to take part in the three-day National Belgian Eucharistic Congress.

Archbishop Joseph Van Roey took the opportunity at the congress to assail the anti-Church campaign in Russia. The chalice which Pope Pius used recently in the mass of reparation for outrages in Russia was brought from Rome for use in the services here. Belgian workmen show little leaning toward bolshevism, for a great throng of them are attending the congress.

Malines suggests Venice today, as all wheel traffic is suspended. On ropes over the streets are suspended the papal and Belgian flags, and triumphal arches also span the narrow avenues. Show windows along the line of the processions have images of Christ and the Virgin, surrounded by flowers and candles, and the streets are strewn with a fine white sand of gold or silver confetti.

High mass was celebrated at 11 A. M. by the Archbishop. Premier Jaspar and members of the Cabinet, other Senators, Deputies and civic authorities attended the mass, which was broadcast. This afternoon the holy sacrament was carried through the streets and Cabinet Ministers marched in the procession. Holy relics had a guard of honor composed of 400 officers. A delegation of miners in costume also guarded the relics.

The congress has been most successful.

CALLS ON CATHOLICS TO USE THEIR SCHOOLS

Bishop Guertin Warns Manchester (N. H.) Parents That Disobeying Means Denial of Absolution.

MANCHESTER, N. H., Aug. 31.—Catholic children must be sent to Catholic schools or absolution will be denied to their parents, the Right Rev. George A. Guertin, D. D., Bishop of the Manchester diocese, warned members of St. Joseph's Cathedral parish today.

The statement by the Bishop came in connection with the announcement of the opening of the parish schools on Sept. 8. Parishioners were notified that they could not send their children to public schools without a dispensation from the Bishop.

The parents must confer with the Bishop, who will decide in just what cases the ruling may be waived. If the Bishop decides that certain parents have not a reasonable excuse for placing their children in the public schools, the pupils must be transferred to a Catholic school or absolution will be denied to the parents.

Bishop Guertin explained that the parish schools were conducted at heavy expense to provide Catholic children an education that would give them a proper foundation in their religion as well as other subjects. He declared it was the duty of the Church to carry on the parish schools and the duty of parents to see that their children attended them.

LIKE IDEALS HELD VITAL TO MARRIAGE

Rabbi Lichtenstein Tells Need Also of Mutual Consideration and Self-Sacrifice.

STRESSES COMPANIONSHIP

Declares That if the Institution Were Based Only on Partnership It Would Be Failure.

The three things that are vital for domestic relationships in marriage are common ideals, mutual consideration and self-sacrifice, declared Rabbi Morris Lichtenstein in his sermon on "Love After Marriage" before the Jewish Science Society in the auditorium of the True Sisters building, 150 West Eighty-fifth Street, yesterday.

"Man and woman must have common ideals and a similar outlook on life," he said. "Where ideals are divergent, marriage is unsuccessful. Concord in ideals definitely link a man and woman together. By mutual consideration they do for each other as they would do for themselves."

Self-sacrifice, Rabbi Lichtenstein defined as "subordination of one's own happiness for the other," calling it the highest basis of companionship.

Characterizing marriage as a companionship rather than a partnership, he said that if it were a partnership, happiness would lie in the manner in which each discharged his duty. A practical partnership would make marriage a failure, he declared.

"Before marriage each sees the other as a medium of future happiness," he continued. "After marriage the future arrives, the dreams recede and actual reality replaces it. The fantastic images conjured up by pre-nuptial love are dispelled. It is then that harmonious relationships should be established between man and his wife in order to maintain love.

"Marriage is man's need for some one before whom he may express himself, some one before whom he may speak his deepest thoughts and most profound feelings, some one who may share in his joy and participate in his worries, and who may solace him in his defeat."

COVENANTER SERVICE AT BANFF FESTIVAL

Rev. Dr. C. W. Gordon (Ralph Connor) Gives Sermon From Raft in Lake at Scottish Fete.

BANFF, Aug. 31.—An outdoor covenanter service reminiscent of Jacobite days was held here today at Devil's Cauldron, a near-by mountain stream, as a part of the third day's proceedings of the Highland gathering and Scottish music festival which will be concluded tomorrow. More than 3,000 visitors, including many Americans, listened to the service conducted by the Rev. Dr. Charles W. Gordon, better known as Ralph Connor, Canadian novelist.

Speaking from a raft moored in the middle of Cauldron Lake, Dr. Gordon delivered a sermon congratulating Canada on the preservation of Scottish culture. "This amphitheatre of mountain peaks," he said, "is a reminder of Scotland's rugged highlands wherein was developed the Scot's capacity for idealism, comradeship and suffering. Highland clan and Scottish kirk inculcated the perseverance and faith which survive in the Scottish character today as a heritage from the Scottish pioneers who came to Canada three centuries ago." Tonight's concert opened with a Scottish overture by Harold Eustace Key, music director of the festival. It is a free fantasia on the traditional "My love is like a red red rose."

Mr. Key's "Scottish Melody and Patrol" was played earlier in the festival. The soloists included Brownie Peebles of Chautauqua Opera, Campbell McInnes, baritone; Frances Aimes, soprano, and Allan Wilson, tenor, in groups of Scottish airs.

Pipe Major Edward Collins of the Royal Scotia Battalion of Edinburgh played the regimental march. A repeat performance was given of a romantic ballad opera incorporating songs of Robert Burns.

'BE YOURSELF' SAYS TRUXAL

Dartmouth Preacher Deplores Trend Toward Standardization.

Too many persons are more concerned with making a living than with making a life, according to the Rev. Andrew G. Truxal, Professor of Sociology at Dartmouth College, in his sermon yesterday morning at the West-Park Presbyterian Church, Eighty-sixth Street and Amsterdam Avenue.

"In the stress and strain to keep up our standards of living, we become so engrossed that we have little time for our spiritual needs," said Professor Truxal. "Men, in their anxiety to obtain food, clothing and luxuries, lose their desire for spiritual joy. The great temptation is to fall into a common standard. We want to be like every one else. Be yourself. Be content when your own individuality is expressed. In a world where everything is standardized, where every one fits a common pattern, the greatest need is for us to be ourselves. So many of us make a business of living, not an art, as Jesus did."

DEFENDS CITY HOME LIFE.

Bishop Tyler Says Love of God Will Sanctify Dwelling Anywhere.

Manhattan's towering apartments can have no more ruinous effect on home life than the quiet of a village street, if only the people will let their homes grow in the mellowing grace of God's love, the Right Rev. Dr. John Poyntz Tyler, missionary Bishop of North Dakota, said in his sermon yesterday morning at St. Thomas Protestant Episcopal Church, Fifty-third Street and Fifth Avenue.

"Let me tell you that the metropolitan area, with its seven millions of persons, can have many real homes," Bishop Tyler declared. "They say New York destroys home life—of course it does, but so does the smallest village. Some of the finest homes I ever saw existed in a single room. Home life doesn't dwell in museums of arid waste and luxury—or in a bungalow. The love of God is the true home-maker.

"And let me add that the love of home and its stability is a vital contribution to any nation's greatness."

United International Church Urged by English Preacher

The founding of an international Christian church without denominational subdivisions was urged by the Rev. Arthur E. Howard of the Wavertree Presbyterian Church, Liverpool, England, in his sermon yesterday morning at the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church.

"The old frontiers have gone," Dr. Howard said. "Socially, industrially, politically and morally, we are facing the same great questions all over the world today.

"The keenest members of society are not lined up with the Church because we do not ask enough of them to make it worth their while. We have been too much preoccupied with traditions, with leanings to past loyalties that do not meet the present needs of humanity.

"In the last war the question of unity of command was raised. It caused innumerable squabbles and arguments, but it finally became imperative if victory were to be achieved. The same thing will happen in the Church; but let us hope we will have the grace to seek that unity before it is thrust upon us by some great world crisis."

QUEST FOR GAIN STUPID, DR. BELL DECLARES

St. Stephen's College Warden Condemns Our Civilization in Southampton Sermon.

All men are stupid in their scramble after material gains, the Rev. Dr. Bernard Iddings Bell, warden of St. Stephen's College, Annandale-on-Hudson, declared in his sermon at St. Andrew's Dune Protestant Episcopal Church, Southampton, L. I., yesterday morning. It all comes down to one thing, he declared, the boredom of the rich and the envy of it among the poor.

"Our civilization gives no more real joy to the rich than to the poor," Dr. Bell continued. "What dull and clumsy people we have been, with our eyes glued to possessions. We have substituted the conception of a free industry with the idea of manufacturing vast quantities of cheap goods. We have seasons wherein men and women overwork like beasts and then long periods of anxious unemployment while the world tries to absorb the overproduction. Every nation has become an avid seeker for markets in which to dispose of its surplus goods.

"Our ruthlessly competitive spirit inevitably spells for war in the future. Industry run as it is today has produced a set of people so stuffed with unspendable money that vulgarity and arrogance, with the debasement of good taste, has resulted. While in contrast, a vast concourse of our population lives a precarious existence. We have commercialized amusement and have made it unamusing and unrefreshing. We have debauched the home and, in short, have created a dingy, tawdry world where neither rich nor poor can find much contentment or peace. And all of this has arisen out of our having esteemed the produce more precious than the producer. All labor, all industry, business of every sort, comprise an agency for making known the will of God. This is what we have forgotten.

"We are all just stupid people, after those things which are of lesser value than the human spirit. What a state we are in! One class is bored and the other class is envious of that boredom. There are great labors to be performed, sacrifices to be offered, before we can shake off the inertia of a decadent materialism. As yet we have only begun to live. Yet God is patient. Still He cares."

BERLIN BISHOP INSTALLED.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Aug. 31.—Berlin's first Catholic Bishop in modern times was installed today. He is Dr. Christian Schreiber, who is also Bishop of Meissen, Saxony. The ceremony took place at St. Hedwig's Church with a Pontifical mass.

Bishop Schreiber thanked the Pope, the Prussian Government and the Parliamentarians who helped in creating the bishopric, which he called a great achievement also from the viewpoint of the community.

DR. PRINCE PLEADS FOR HAPPIER LABOR

INWARD SOLACE NEEDED

It Must Replace Joy in Outward Things Until Conditions Improve, Nova Scotia Pastor Declares

Unemployment, inadequate remuneration and the excessive length of the working day have taken the song away from the lips of the worker and until the Labor Day dawns when these conditions shall not prevail, men must look for music in their hearts and not in outward things, according to the Rev. Dr. Samuel H. Prince of Nova Scotia, who preached the Labor Day Sunday sermon at St. Stephen's Protestant Episcopal Church at Sixty-ninth Street, near Broadway yesterday.

Using as his text the Psalm, "Let the praises of God be in their mouths and a two-edged sword in their hands," Dr. Prince said:

"Where ever men have toiled together they have learned to sing together. The oldest songs in the world are songs of toil. It is good for the man to be happy in his work; it is good for the work and for his fellowmen. 'Give me the man who sings at his work,' said Carlyle. Joy makes the muscles strong.

"If we are not happy in our work we should try to change our work, and in choosing our work we should choose something at which we can sing as well as make money. We all know men who are mending machines who should be mending broken bodies. If a man did nothing else in life but be cheerful he would not have lived in vain, but on this Labor Day Sunday when we think of the men who go to their work in overalls we must admit that it is no wonder that the song has left their lips.

"Silence has fallen on their lives. In the great city streets the army of workers are silent and sullen of heart. What has stopped the song? What are the great shadows that darken the lives of so many men today? With the prayer on their lips, 'Give us this day our daily work,' a great horde of nearly three million workers in the United States are facing the terrible circumstance of unemployment.

"The Labor Day Sunday message of the Episcopal Church is a plea for work for these men. Under the present system, instead of becoming citizens men are made nothing more than voting cattle. How can a man put song in his work when he has no voice in his occupational life?"

SPIRITUAL RACKETEERS ASSAILED BY DR. SIZOO

Washington Pastor Decries Their Attacks on the Church and Similar Things.

In the modern scheme of life there are those who by their attitude toward the Church and religious issues may well be designated as "spiritual racketeers," the Rev. Dr. Joseph R. Sizoo, pastor of the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church of Washington, D. C., declared yesterday morning at the Collegiate Reformed Church of St. Nicholas, Fifth Avenue and Forty-eighth Street.

A spiritual racketeer is a man who continually is "blowing up" the Church and everything else which is planned for the public welfare, Dr. Sizoo said. This man has nothing but contempt for the Bible and looks upon Jesus Christ in a cynical light, he declared.

Dr. Sizoo spoke of Jesus the teacher, and said that, while the teachers of later days complained of having inferior material to work with, Jesus took any material and was never disappointed.

"When the woman at the well confessed the bad qualities of her character to Jesus, He was not discouraged with her, nor did He rebuke her," Dr. Sizoo declared.

"Jesus did not proceed to write a sex novel about her. He did not ask the police to round up all persons of questionable character, nor did he introduce any governmental resolutions."

URGES REBUILDING ON CHRIST'S PLANS

Dr. Lorimer Wants Society Patterned to "Specifications of Jesus the Carpenter."

ASKS FAIRNESS TO LABOR

Human Values Must Be Placed First in Industry, He Says—Six Churches Join in Service.

The rebuilding of society on "the plans and specifications of Jesus the Carpenter" must be one of the teachings and aspirations of the Church, according to the Labor Day message of the Rev. Dr. Addison B. Lorimer, pastor of Mount Morris Baptist Church, Fifth Avenue and 126th Street, where a union service of six churches of the community around Mount Morris Park was held yesterday.

The "plans and specifications of Jesus the Carpenter," Dr. Lorimer said, require the placing of human values in industry above considerations of profit and dividends, a fair wage scale and standard of living for labor, protection against industrial hazards and accidents, provision against the privations and sufferings of unemployment, and abandonment of the widely prevalent idea that a worker above the age of 40 or 45 should be ruthlessly thrown on the scrap heap.

"The Church must show a new interest in the labor question," Dr. Lorimer declared. "We must correct the idea that the Church is controlled by the exploiters of labor, and prove by our cooperation that the Church fosters the interests of labor. We do well to continue our ministries of relief. But a more important service is to remove the causes of distress. I wish we had a church employment bureau as a definite part of our church program."

OUR LAWYER GUESTS.

It was a high compliment to the American Bar Association that so large a number of leading members of the English, Scotch, Irish and French bars should have crossed the sea to attend its annual meeting at Chicago. On the way they visited their professional brethren in Canada, and have since spent a few days in Washington, stopping over at Philadelphia en route to New York. Here they are the guests of the six local bar associations, who will do their best to gratify the desire of the visitors "for to see and to admire," while also giving them opportunities for personal and fraternal contacts and exchange of views. In a way this visit of so many distinguished men and women may be thought of as in return for the pious pilgrimages which American lawyers have made to London and to Paris. It falls at a time of year when few of our higher courts are sitting. But perhaps this was not undesigned, since it is probable that a happy escape from judicial proceedings was among the motives which induced these lawyers to cross the Atlantic! At all events, they will be left in no doubt of their hearty welcome here. Among their names one detects famous advocates and barristers, together with judges of the highest reputation, and several French maîtres who worthily uphold the long and splendid tradition of the bar of France. They may rest assured that New York wishes them a pleasant and profitable stay so long as they are within our borders.

OHIO DEMOCRATIC "HARMONY."

Chairman FESS needs all the encouragement he can get. The Democrats of his State have copied one of his lessons of wisdom. He says that prohibition is not a political issue. In the Ohio Democratic primaries GEORGE WHITE, Dry, was named for Governor, ROBERT J. BULKLEY, Wet, for Senator. Could there be a more edifying equilibrium? Some crude Democrats wanted to disturb it. They sought to have a downright anti-prohibition "plank" in the platform. At a conference of candidates and State leaders in Columbus, the spirit of harmony prevailed. So did Mr. WHITE. It was decided that no reference to prohibition appear in the State platform. State questions and national questions will be put in separate compartments.

Mr. WHITE is "highly pleased." Mr. BULKLEY, while disagreeing, agrees for the sake of harmony. His colleagues on the State ticket thought that a "demand" for repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment would give the subject "a false emphasis" as a State issue and tend to obscure policies of deeper local interest. The arrangement thrust upon him is ingenious and, in the circumstances, may be necessary, whatever imputations of "pussyfooting" are made by the enemy. Mr. COX and Mr. ATLEE POMERENE have been less discreet in the past. They have said rude things about the State Anti-Saloon League. Mr. COX is for repeal. We don't know that these ancients were consulted about the peace pact of Columbus.

Former Governor DONAHEY has been getting Dryer and Dryer since he got out of office. Yet he has promised to make speeches for Mr. BULKLEY as well as for Mr. WHITE. Such are the blessings of concord. And Mr. BULKLEY, in spite of the Columbus act of oblivion, has mitigated nothing of his courageous opinion:

The omission of the subject from both party platforms does not change my own opinion, and I shall continue to advocate uncompromisingly the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment and of the Volstead and Jones acts.

After a largely impromptu canvass, Mr. BULKLEY was nominated by a remarkable vote over competitors deemed strong. The issue which he stood for stirred the Democratic voters, especially in the cities. The absence of official party endorsement may make that issue only more conspicuous; and Senator MCCULLOCH is Dry. It is one of the queerest superstitions of political managers that they can "make" issues. The voters attend to that.

REGULATING WOMEN'S WORK

When men advocate special legislation for the protection of working women their considered speech is always shot through with noble phrases. No doubt many of them are uttered in perfect sincerity, and the women who ask for special protective legislation are certainly honest and frank about it. Many believe that for the sake of women's health and their morals and to prevent their exploitation by employers there should be laws to take care of them. Not all are convinced of this necessity, even though such leaders as the Secretary of Labor, the heads of the American Federation of Labor and most of the important members of the Women's Bureau of the Department of Labor favor restrictive legislation for women workers. ALMA LUTZ, a member of the Council of the National Woman's Party, explains in the current Atlantic Monthy why she thinks such a view is short-sighted and as damaging to men as to women.

She does not regret the laws which were made when women first entered industry. The women were not organized and could not protect themselves against employers who gave them low wages for long hours in unsanitary surroundings. Those early laws bettered their condition. But further legislation, applying to women and not to men, she considers of actual harm to both groups. The old talk of altruistic motives, protecting American womanhood, and so forth, is out of place now that women are no longer a temporary addition to the working world. They cannot be run out of industry, and they should have a chance for competition with men on equal terms.

Men realize that an employer prefers workers without privileges, and they sometimes hope to curtail the employment of women through special labor laws supposed to protect them. When the supply of labor is plentiful, women can get work only by accepting wages lower than men's, and Miss LUTZ thinks that this means an eventual reduction in men's wages for the same work. So she argues it is foolish for men to try to bring about a cut in women's wages through enforced privileges, as the net result will be a reduction in their own income.

Whatever the opinions on the main question may be, there can be no doubt that there is too much sentimentality among regulators of women's work. They are right in wanting that work limited to a reasonable number of hours. Women should have time for recreation. They should work in clean, well-lighted rooms, and they should receive a sufficient wage to provide them with plenty of nourishing food and with decent clothing. When they have babies they should consult a physician to find out whether their regular work will be better for them than the work they would do at home. These things were all true when women worked early and late in their own homes, but no one ever waxed oratorical over them then. It is easy for a prejudiced or emotional person to discern reasons why the hard work women do in factories requires legislative protection while equally hard work done at home does not. Similarly shorter hours, no overtime, seats behind counters and other privileges are seen to be necessary for women workers but not for men. The equalitarians believe that a good labor law should apply equally to both sexes.

"A MORE PERFECT UNION."

From the first, and definitely in his elaborate "Memorandum," M. BRIAND has desired that his project for a United States of Europe should be freely and thoroughly discussed. "Eh, bien," writes the veteran GABRIEL HANOTAUX in the Revue des Deux Mondes, "discutons." His appeal has been responded to in a striking manner by the volunteer group of statesmen, diplomats and lawyers known as the International Juridical Union. They have just issued in Paris their comments upon the Briand plan. They all approve of the main idea while making some pretty sharp criticisms, but also constructive suggestions. It might seem that they cut at the very root of M. BRIAND'S scheme by declaring that, first of all, the proposed Federation of European States should not be "a political organization." It will be remembered that M. BRIAND made that a fundamental requisite. Without political agreements, he maintained, nothing could be done in the way of making practical arrangements for greater freedom of commerce, better postal and financial and banking facilities, assimilation of domestic laws, &c.

However, much depends upon the meaning of the word "political." By it M. BRIAND never contemplated anything like organic union between the several European countries. What he apparently had in mind was a series of "understandings," or treaties or international safeguards which would give to each nation a full assurance of "security." That word, of course, has haunted the French mind, and been in the thoughts of those who direct the foreign policy of France, for many years past. The French Foreign Minister may well be excused for giving it first place. And it will be noted that the International Juridical Union rejects simply a political organization "in the strict sense of the word." So, too, would M. BRIAND reject it. It is also probable that he will be glad of this searching study of his project, partly because it serves to sharpen and clarify some of his own conceptions. Particularly would this be the case with the relation of the proposed Federation to the League of Nations. Between the two M. BRIAND saw no conflict. But these new critics of his work very definitely decide that the United States of Europe "must be formed "and must function within the "framework of the League of Na-"tions." They would also tolerate, or even favor, the formation of other "regional groups," similarly subordinated to the League, and not intruding upon or duplicating any of its activities. This would be agreeable to the Little Entente, which likewise is regarded as an essential part of French foreign policy today.

For the rest, the propositions laid down by the International Juridical Union are friendly and hopeful. They do not look to see a federated Europe created overnight. Progress toward it must be tentative and by one slow step after another. The great things to be desired are the perfect equality of all the members of the Federation, and the distinct understanding that it is not directed against any single country or group of countries "either on the Conti-"nent of Europe or outside its "borders." This is intended, of course, to allay any American suspicions of the purpose. It would apply to South America as well as to the United States. In fact, an influential Spanish newspaper, La Epoca, has lately asked the challenging question why there should not be a Hispano-American union similar to the one proposed by M. BRIAND for Europe. All these matters will be subject to free and lively but sympathetic debate at Geneva. Out of it there cannot fail to come a clearer understanding of the difficulties of the great problem which M. BRIAND has posed, but also of its promise and of the possibility of its ultimate solution.

POLAND ON THE SEAS.

New ships are far from a novelty in New York Harbor, and new flags have been not unknown to our waters since the World War brought several nations into being with ambitions and commercial policies very like their elders. But a record seems to have been established with the arrival and departure last week of a new ship from a new port under a new flag. This was the steamship Polonia, first of a group of three vessels designed as the nucleus of a commercial fleet in keeping with Poland's place in the European scheme and her hopes for the future. The nation under whose flag the Polonia sails is eleven years old; the port from which it hails, Gdynia, is not much more than half a dozen years old.

Gdynia owes its origin to certain disadvantages connected with the peculiar legal status of Danzig, which is Poland's principal port. The city fulfills that rôle without being part of Poland, constituting with its environs the Free State of Danzig, under the protection of the League of Nations, which has a high commissioner resident in Danzig. But though Poland is entrusted with the conduct of foreign affairs for the Free State and enjoys extensive commercial rights in Danzig, including its own postal service, it is precluded from making use of the harbor for military or naval purposes. The handicap made itself felt in the course of the war with Soviet Russia in 1920 and led to the founding of Gdynia on Polish territory. It lies a dozen miles to the northwest of Danzig, with which it is connected by railway. Another line from Gdynia to the interior of Poland entirely within national territory is under construction, and among other projects is a canal running to the Vistula and so tying up with the system of internal waterways.

Ultimately, therefore, Gdynia may make the Polish nation independent of Danzig port—at least, that is the aspiration—and tension resulting from one of the more difficult provisions of the Treaty of Versailles, the separation from Germany of a city with a population about 95 per cent German and its partial subordination to Polish rule, may be relaxed. But the rise of Gdynia promises no solution for an even more troublesome problem created by the peace treaty. That is connected with the narrow strip of Polish territory projecting to the Baltic between Danzig Free State and Germany, and cutting off East Prussia from the rest of the Reich. The po[illegible] Gdynia lies precisely on the [illegible] of this Polish barrier, and the greater its prosperity the more difficult of possible adjustment would the problem of East Prussia become.

IMPERFECT ANALOGIES.

Governor ROOSEVELT has been making a tour of the St. Lawrence region with the new Water Power Commission, following the footsteps of President HOOVER, who escorted the American and Canadian engineers down the river some years ago to lay the groundwork for the waterway project, in which power development plays a leading rôle. In his public appearances the Governor spoke hopefully of the industrial expansion in the "north country" that should follow the harnessing of the river, which all will agree politics has too long delayed. Having with him the members of the St. Lawrence Bridge Commission, and before him the example of Watertown with its municipal electric plant, he took occasion to defend such examples of government in business.

But bridges, local power plants and a great hydroelectric development like that projected on the St. Lawrence afford only meager parallels when it comes to determining their proper relations to government. A strong argument can be made for the "authority" method of building bridges, particularly on interstate streams. They are a part of the public highway system. Once built, they require little attention. If the governing body finds it difficult to own and operate them directly, it can do so without burdening the taxpayer by the "bridge authority" device, with tolls remitted at the earliest possible moment in order that the highway may again be free to all users.

St. Lawrence power, on the other hand, will necessarily remain part of a private system of development and distribution. Governor SMITH wanted the State or the public agency to rest content with building the dam and generating the current. Governor ROOSEVELT has talked of going further and putting the public agency into the costly business of distributing the current to the private companies. In either event the ultimate consumer—corresponding to the man who drives his car over the bridge—will deal not with the "authority," but with a private company. Water-power plants, too, although easier to operate than steam-power plants, must keep pace with science and invention. Whereas bridge building has long been in public hands—except for the recent temporary impetus given to toll bridges by the demands of the automobile—the power business has ever been, still is and will long continue to be predominantly in private hands.

This is not said to shut out the possibility of public development of the St. Lawrence as advocated by Governor ROOSEVELT, but only to point out that we are here dealing with a special case. There is no analogy to bridge building. There is no analogy to Watertown's municipal plant; Oswego's experience, if we are not mistaken, has been precisely the reverse. The only possible analogy in this country is to the project to harness the Colorado in Boulder Canyon, where the Federal Government is to build the dam and the power house and local agencies are to come and get the power. If New York is to follow the example of the Colorado River States—with the trustee modification—it should first make certain not only that public development is "feasible," but that it is preferable to private development, or made necessary by the complicated interstate and international relations involved.

AMERICAN ANTARCTIC WHALING.

The sailing from this port of the whaler Frango to take part in the Antarctic fisheries in competition with the Norwegians, British and Argentines attests the profitableness of the industry, as now conducted with floating factories attended by fast "killer" craft to bring the whales in for flensing and refining. Once a year in the late Spring the C. A. Larsen and James Clarke Ross, flying the Norwegian flag and hailing from Sandefjord, the prosperous little seaport on the Kristiana Fjord, dock at Staten Island to deliver large cargoes of whale oil. The Frango may prove the pioneer of a modern American whaling fleet. She was built in Norway, and her crew come mainly from Tonsberg, Larvik and Sandefjord, which may be said to correspond to New Bedford, Nantucket and Stonington in the days when American whaling was in its glory.

Of our times the Norwegians are the premier whalers. They invented the Sven Foyn harpoon gun, which makes short work of the biggest whale. It was Captain LARSEN who founded the first company for the Antarctic fisheries. In 1927 the Norwegians brought out of the south 704,000 barrels of oil. So rapidly were the whales being taken that regulation became necessary. The Norwegians willingly cooperate to effect conservation, which is in the interest of all nations operating in Antarctic waters. In the Southern Princess and the Southern Empress the British have steam whalers almost as large as the C. A. Larsen and are competing strenuously with the Norwegians.

The entrance of the Americans into the field signifies a rivalry that may become formidable. It seems in order for the American flag to be seen in the Antarctic on ships hunting for the whale, not only because the United States formerly led the world as a whaling nation in a romantic period, but because it may figure prominently as an Antarctic Power by right of Admiral BYRD'S discovery of new lands on the White Continent. "In 1906," says Professor HOHMAN in his book "The American Whaleman," "just sixty "years after New World whaling "had reached its zenith with a fleet "of 735 vessels and 233,000 tons, "only a beggarly flotilla of forty-"two whalers remained afloat." In 1924 one of the two survivors, the Wanderer, piled up in a storm on the jagged rocks of Cuttyhunk, and it is owing to Colonel GREEN of Nonquit that a specimen of the old American whaler, the Charles W. [illegible]an, may be seen embedded in [illegible] beside a dock at that quaint port on Buzzard's Bay. Americans will watch with interest the fortunes of the Frango in her quest of whales in Antarctic seas.

LIBERALISM VS. COMMUNISM

President BUTLER'S address, "The One and the Many," covers in swift review the whole course of man's social, economic and political development from the time when "the mass was everything" and the individual was "relatively inconsequent and unimportant." Then it surveys the present scene, in which two great systems are in conflict. One is that order which grew up in ancient Greece and has been running its "extraordinary and highly productive course" for twenty-five centuries. The other is now undergoing experiment in an area which spreads out over half of Europe and a third of Asia. This, which is collectivism in its extreme form, and is called "Communism," gave the name "Capitalism" to the system which it seeks to end; but President BUTLER protests that it is a misleading term. Its rightful name is "Liberalism," capital being but "an incident, a by-product in the growth of liberty."

Communism has so shocked the Western sense of right and justice that it is difficult to give it a fair hearing, after the violence and cruelty that have marked the Russian experiment. But, apart from this, it is not concerned for every one in the many. It exalts a single social and economic group to political power. If the "one" belongs to a certain class, he is assured freedom within certain bounds, but for others there is not even that circumscribed opportunity. Despite its equalitarian professions, Communism has set up "a class State with a class government."

Praise was incidentally given a few years ago by a member of the Russian Central Committee to Liberalism, as practiced in America, when he was expressing gratitude for substantial aid given in the time of famine. He characterized these Americans as "collective individualists"—that is, individualists who were anxious for the good of the collectivity. It is that very kind of individualism which Dr. BUTLER preaches in urging especially those individuals who hold the future of Liberalism so largely in their hands—the very rich and the directors of large corporate organizations—not to treat their wealth as a merely personal or family possession. The fundamental tenets of Liberalism must include social-mindedness, if it is to minister to the many while giving freedom for self-development to the individual. "This individualism is the true socialism." To quote another of long vision, "The rife idea "whose spiritual beauty multiplieth "in communion to transcendent might."

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Grateful for Small Favors. Faced with the prospect of a $600,000,000 budget, New York City can find consolation in the report that 1 per cent of this sum may be retrieved out of the funds assigned for the schools. More than a million dollars will be saved through leaves of absence granted to teachers, nearly half a million dollars will be deducted for unexcused absences, and close to $4,500,000 will be saved to the school treasury by resignations from the teaching staff.

Such savings accrue, presumably, because it takes some time before a vacancy created by the resignation of a regular teacher is filled by a permanent appointment. Meanwhile, the class would be in charge of a substitute at considerably lower pay. At any rate, it is a comfort to think of something snatched out of the school budget to compensate for so many calls upon the city's funds in other departments. If only enough teachers took leave of absence, stayed away without excuse, or resigned, the problem of these ever-mounting budgets might be solved.

Publishing History Repeats. Ninety years ago the book-selling business was also in difficulties. Publishers who are seeking now to restore their margin of profits may gain profit of another kind by reading in the August number of The Cornhill Magazine an account of how the MURRAYS of Albemarle Street dealt with that "time of great commercial depression." And authors, concerned over the royalty percentage in dollar books, will find interesting what "Glorious JOHN" MURRAY (the second) wrote in declining the manuscript of a Life of Lord ELDON:

"I am very sorry to say that the publishing of Books at this time involves nothing but loss, and that I have found it absolutely necessary to withdraw from the Printers every work that I had in the press, and to return to their authors every MS. for which they required immediate attention."

On the Continent and in America pirate publishers were getting out cheap reprints, and "these parasytical Weekly Publications extract everything that is required by the great mass of readers, viz. sufficient to supply them with conversation in Society." JOHN MURRAY 3d, by originating handbooks of foreign travel, helped to pull his business out of the doldrums, but a restoration of buying power did more. On the basis that everything is relative, the book business had a bad time in the early 1840's but came back to prosperity again.

Education for Charwomen. In their zeal for cleaning up, the authorities in Chicago have turned attention to the corps of stalwart women who mop up marble floors and clear out waste-paper baskets in city offices. Henceforth these scrubwomen must not only be possessed of strength and endurance. They must also pass some sort of intelligence test.

The requirements now demand at least a smattering of general knowledge, ability to read and write and to answer simple questions. Of the present force, over a thousand failed to pass a test of five questions. It would be interesting to know just what the five posers were, who drew them up and how they compare with the Edison list.

It might seem that Chicago is setting too high a standard for charwomen. Yet the job demands a fair amount of tact. To know which stack of papers is to be thrown out and which is to be zealously guarded, which letter out of a basketful was put there by mistake, which visitor by night should be admitted without demur and which should be refused—all this calls for discretion of a high order.

If the new plan continues in effect, it may soon be a common thing to see scrubwomen neglecting the brush for the textbook and cramming for exams.

Women in the Air. The fact that 270 women are licensed to fly in the United States seems to raise the question why any male should hesitate to make his début in the air. Members of the gentler sex not only fly in increasing numbers as passengers, but acquit themselves well as pilots. The Curtiss-Wright Review reports:

"Of the 270 women pilots, twenty-four are transport pilots, thirty-two are limited commercial pilots, one is an industrial pilot, while the remaining 213 are private pilots. This compares favorably with the figures for Jan. 1, 1929, when but two transport (PHOEBE OMLIE and RUTH NICHOLS), six limited commercial pilots and twenty-six private pilots made up the total of thirty-four women pilots."

It is estimated that there will be 500 women pilots registered by the end of 1930. Women under instruction to fly include "society matrons, high school girls, teachers of mathematics, telephone operators, lawyers, stenographers and office managers." A good deal was made the other day of the "flying waitress." There is nothing strange in the fact that women are becoming pilots. Many of them drive automobiles better than their brothers and fathers.

Awaiting Word From Above?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In an editorial this morning entitled "The Man-Seeking Office," in referring to Mr. Tuttle's candidacy, you state, "If he were overtly chasing the honor, he would be asked to disclose his opinion about prohibition," and ask, "How can Mr. Tuttle know what he thinks about prohibition until the State convention has told him?" The fact is that Mr. Tuttle is not yet a Gubernatorial candidate, and there is every reason to believe that if and when the proper time arrives he will leave no doubt about his views on this subject.

But what about the views of Governor Roosevelt on this "all-important" question? You will agree that the people of this State are privileged to know the views of the man who has been their Governor for almost two years, and who will unquestionably be a candidate to succeed himself. Recent newspaper accounts had it that prominent party leaders had influenced the Governor to forget about 1932 and change his original plan to evade this issue, because of the importance of winning the State. Perhaps he cannot know what he thinks about prohibition until the State convention has told him.

JACOB GRUMET.
New York, Aug. 27, 1930.

CARPENTER'S HOUSE.

Printing our dusty feet on curious floors
In the old house of life, from door to window
We grope. We trace doubt's ancient corridors;
In anterooms of peace we watch the shadow.
Pilgrims have been before us; littered, cast
The rooms in waste; and mice have ribbed a trail
Along each board that tramped away the past.
Illusion hangs askew upon one nail.

Up blundering stairs we grope to webby rafters,
Star-crazed to pry a shingle; feel the late
Seeking through vagueness; finding separate,
Unused beside the Builder's broken rule,
The grave clothes folded by the Beautiful.

LONG RIDE FOR A LOW PRICE

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I was much interested in the article by Mr. Copeland, "Visitors Show New York the New York Manner," in THE TIMES Magazine with particular reference to the statement of the possibility of a twenty-six-mile ride for a nickel.

This statement, perfectly accurate, but so inadequate as to what may actually be accomplished by the expenditure of one small 5-cent piece, is nevertheless one that is frequently made as pointing the possibilities of cheap transportation in New York when one may, as a matter of fact, by walking five blocks, get from Mount Vernon to Coney Island for 5 cents.

Some years ago I was employed at the Transit Commission and worked this out. Here it is: Starting from scratch, which is the southern city line of Mount Vernon, one walks south along White Plains Road to the 241st Street terminus of the White Plains Road line of the Interborough subway. Take the subway train downtown to Grand Central. There take the Interborough line to Queens. Go out past the Queensborough Plaza station to one of the other stations with a crossover to the west-bound tracks. Leave the east-bound train and cross over as indicated to the westbound platform.

Then—because the lines there are jointly operated, take a B. M. T. elevated train back to the Plaza station, then take a B. M. T. local train, at that point down to Times Square and there walk across the B. M. T. platform and take a Sea Beach or West End train, preferably the former, to Coney Island.

Of course, the good old B. M. T. may be pretty indignant if you do this. It gets none of the nickel, the laugh is all with the Interborough, if there is any laughter. Morally such a transaction is terrible. It will probably be found to be a misdemeanor and perhaps a felony—maybe, for all I know, treason—to violate the Public Service Commission law and accept free transportation from a common carrier. But after all this is what gives the only touch of adventure to the exploit.

Then again, if one desires to ride around a lot for a nickel, say during the period of Spring house-cleaning at home or one of those chilly, mushy Sundays in mid-November—I can't imagine when else any one would want to try it—one can vacillate, so to speak, between elevated and subway lines in Manhattan, the Bronx and Queens. He can see whether he prefers underground or overhead transportation with changes from one type of service to the other, for instance, on the Jerome Avenue line, the White Plains Road line, both in the Bronx or the lines in Queens again. He can go on and on until hunger stops his endurance flight.

Our Economic System.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In THE TIMES of Aug. 19 is a letter from Edmund C. Evans, who says that Mr. MacDonald and Mr. Hoover "made the mistake of asserting beforehand that they knew how to cure all the people's ills." Mr. Hoover never made such a statement, and I doubt if Mr. MacDonald did, as he is far too shrewd to indulge in that sort of thing.

Mr. Evans says our system violates justice and natural law. He does not tell us how. He speaks of the "economic system of privilege" sustained by the modern State based on land monopoly, tariff barriers and trade restrictions. There is plenty of land unoccupied which can be had for the taking, but the people who object to what they call "land monopoly" really want to divide up not the land in its natural state but those things that other people, by their labor and savings, have put on the land, or land that others by their labor and savings have made more valuable. In other words, they want to divide up the results of other people's labors and savings without compensation. This was the plan of the Soviet Government of Russia.

He says that "since the closing of the frontier in the United States similar conditions confront us here." The similar conditions are apparently unemployment, and it takes but a small amount of logic and common sense to see that if we admitted more people at the present time there would be more unemployment.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

A message from Finland appeared in the press of many lands in which it was reported that Mr. Virkkunen, a supporter of prohibition, had stated that "prohibition is not only a great disappointment but a real hindrance to work and the chief cause of intemperance."

Feeling sure that so responsible a minister as Mr. Virkkunen did not make such a statement, I communicated at once with Finland for the facts, and I am now informed that "this statement does not appear at all in the original interview published in the Swedish Svenska Morgonblad. It is obvious that the passage referred to was coined by some one who sent it out to the press."

Anyway, She "Ghosted."

To the Editor of The New York Times:

And so "Enterprise ghosted ahead of her three rivals." Did she actually do this, or did she ghost away from her three rivals? It is rather interesting to note that in December, 1891, "the Dragon, on the second day of the race, ghosted away from the trio." This is the use of the intransitive verb "to ghost" in the sense of stealing away from, which conveys the idea that, like a ghost, Enterprise stole away from her rivals.

SEES HOOVER LOSING IN PUBLIC ESTEEM

Criticizes His Leadership and His Decisions on Relief for Financial Depression.

Millions of Americans are becoming disillusioned on the subject of President Hoover's greatness, according to a statement in an article on "Mr. Hoover and the Depression" in the current issue of The Commonweal, by the Rev. John A. Ryan of the Catholic University at Washington. Father Ryan is the author of many books dealing with economic topics and at present occupies the chair of Moral Theology and Industrial Ethics at the Catholic University.

Father Ryan does not hold President Hoover accountable for the stock market collapse and the financial depression, which, he declares, are attributable in large measure to the "foolish predictions of continued prosperity uttered by Mr. Hoover's immediate predecessor." The slump, as he sees it, has been the occasion rather than the cause of a "great decline in popular esteem" suffered by President Hoover, whom he takes to task severely for sins of omission and commission incidental to his attempt to remedy conditions.

"The things that he has done and the things that he has left undone since last November have shown that Mr. Hoover does not possess those superior qualities which were attributed to him during the Presidential campaign and for some years previously," Father Ryan writes. He adds that a host of Americans have discovered since then that Mr. Hoover "is neither a great economist, nor a courageous or effective leader, nor a master of fundamental principle."

Mr. Hoover, according to Father Ryan, demonstrated his lack of understanding of economic questions when he accepted at their face value promises by financiers and industrialists to keep up wages and undertake extensive construction work in private industry to the end that the purchasing power of the public might be kept up, and relied to a greater extent than he should upon these for relief.

"An economist who knew human nature would not have expected a general fulfillment of the promise to maintain existing wage rates," Father Ryan writes. "An economist who was fully acquainted with the facts would have realized that industries unable to utilize all their present capacity would not undertake to expand their plants."

An increase in public works, Father Ryan declares, was the one pendable element in the plan growing out of Mr. Hoover's conferences with industrialists, financiers and labor leaders, following the Stock Exchange crash.

"To become really effective this measure would have to assume vast dimensions," the article continues. "A paltry increase of two or three hundred million dollars for Federal buildings was clearly insufficient to relieve a depression that threatened to be among the greatest of recent times."

Father Ryan goes on to show that, in apparent conflict with his emergency program, Mr. Hoover advocated a $160,000,000 reduction in personal income tax, thus "dissipating" funds that should have been applied to the public works program to relieve unemployment. He also points out that Mr. Hoover flatly rejected a recommendation from the National Unemployment League that he ask Congress to authorize a very large expenditure for road building.

"His decision may be good politics, but it is poor economics," Father Ryan finds. "Mr. Hoover's course with regard to tax reduction and the decrease of departmental expenses is the authentic recourse of the politician. It exhibits neither the human statesman nor the competent economist. In the meantime the depression is still with us and still threatens to affect profoundly the November elections."

TO PICK EUGENICS SERMON

Rabbi Wise, Dr. Neilson and Prof. Hooton Will Judge Contest.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Aug. 31.—The American Eugenics Society today announced the appointment of William Allan Neilson, president of Smith College; Rabbi Stephen S. Wise of New York, and Professor Earnest Alfred Hooton, Professor of Anthropology at Harvard, as the judges in its sermon contest which closed today with sermons received from every part of the United States.

The society's committee on cooperation with clergymen, which has been in direct charge of the contest, announced tonight that a preliminary scrutiny shows the entries to be of a high quality in their literary, homiletic and scientific aspects. The announcement of the awards will be made in a few weeks.

The contest was open to any minister of any faith and to theological students, and the sermon was to be preached before a bona fide religious congregation. It was to deal, in general, with the relation of the churches to eugenics.

The sermons will be judged for their scientific validity by Professor Hooton, for their persuasiveness by Rabbi Wise and for their literary quality by President Neilson. Prizes of $500, $200 and three third prizes of $100 each will be awarded.

REV. W. A. SPOONER IS DEAD AT OXFORD

ORIGINATED "SPOONERISMS"

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 31.—The Rev. Dr. William Archibald Spooner, formerly warden of New College, Oxford, and author or reputed author of topsy-turvy words and phrases known as "Spoonerisms," died at Oxford yesterday. He was 86 years old.

Gave Word to Dictionaries.

Dr. Spooner was for sixty-eight years, from the time he was 18 until his death, connected with New College, Oxford. For twenty-one years, from 1903 to 1924, he was warden of the college, and since then had been an Honorary Fellow.

Highly regarded as a scholar, with a number of classical and religious works to his credit, he was nevertheless most widely known as the originator of "spoonerisms," taken from his name. The term has a place in accredited dictionaries.

"Spoonerisms" began when Professor Spooner transposed letters in two words in giving out as a hymn in chapel, "Kinquering Kongs Their Titles Take." It has been stated on good authority that this was the only genuine unconscious spoonerism he ever uttered. Thousands, however, have been credited to him, some of which he probably consciously invented after the legend had become established, with the help of generations of Oxford undergraduates.

Professor Spooner was born in North Staffordshire, England, on July 22, 1844. After attending Oswestry School he became a scholar at New College at 18 and a fellow five years later. He was a lecturer the next year and a tutor in 1869. In 1872 he was ordained a deacon and in 1875 a priest, becoming chaplain to Archbishop Tait in 1878. He was public examiner for classical honors for many years and examining chaplain to the Bishop of Peterborough from 1899 to 1916.

Wrote "The Histories of Tacitus."

He was the author of "The Histories of Tacitus," 1891; "Bishop Butler, His Life and Writings," 1901; "Memoir of William of Wykeham," 1909.

From the time of his twisting of the hymn, as a new college tutor, "spoonerisms" grew and multiplied. An idle student reported that the professor had rebuked him for "tasting a whole worm." At a subsequent chapel service he was said to have asked his audience if they were never conscious of the carrying in their breasts of "a half-warmed fish."

Then, again, he gave out his text for a sermon, according to members of his audience, as "easier for a camel to pass through the knee of an idol."

At the time of Queen Victoria's Jubilee he was credited with calling for "three cheers for our queer old dean." On a visit to the naval fleet at Portsmouth he was quoted as asking to go out and "see the cattleships and bruisers." A wedding was, of course, the setting for perhaps the most often quoted of all: "Is it kistomary to cuss the bride?"

Students Invented "Spoonerisms."

At a meeting of farm laborers he was reputed to have referred to his auditors as "tons of soil." A student said he had been rebuked for "fighting liars in the quadrangle," and a whole class was scolded somewhat severely for "hissing all my mystery lectures." Mrs. Spooner was supposed to have been alarmed one evening at home when her husband at a window remarked that it was "roaring with pain."

At Professor Spooner's golden wedding celebration two years ago Robert Seton, a former pupil, confessed that, though he had quoted the professor many times, he had actually never heard but the one remark about the "Kinquering Kongs" from his own lips.

"It became the talk of all Oxford," he said, "and we used to spend our time in inventing spoonerisms. I collaborated with a friend and it was he who brought out the book of 'spoonerisms.' A similar book was published by a man named Ward. Both created a stir at Oxford. Although Dr. Spooner has denied having uttered these slips of the tongue, he appreciates the humor of them, and I believe that he has occasionally made a spoonerism deliberately to raise a laugh."

BORAH AT CAPITAL, BETTER.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31.—Senator William E. Borah, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, returned today from a vacation at Poland Springs, Me., where he went shortly after the Senate adjourned to take a complete rest on the advice of his physicians. He reports his health greatly improved and appears fit.

Senator Borah expects to confer with State Department officials about conditions in Latin America before he goes to Idaho. He expressed the belief that economic depression in Peru and Argentina were contributing to the political troubles.

After a few days here he will go home, but does not expect to make many speeches in his own behalf. He received the Republican nomination for the Senate without opposition and has only a formal opposition from the Democrats. It is expected that he will make a number of speeches to aid Senator Norris and other insurgent Republicans.

In a speech of thanks to the audience, Adolph Lewisohn, Mrs. Charles S. FIRE FIGHTER 72 YEARS, STILL IN RANKS AT 88

F. D. Colsey, Nyack Volunteer, Recalls Service at Crystal Palace Blaze Here.

NYACK, N. Y., Aug. 31.—Frank D. Colsey, who at 88 years is still a member of the Chelsea Truck Company, a local volunteer fire company, has rounded out seventy-two years of service as a volunteer fireman, it was revealed today. The early part of his service was rendered in New York and the last few decades here. Mr. Colsey believes he is one of the three oldest volunteer firemen in the State. It was in 1858, when New York City was concentrated principally below Fourteenth Street and before the days of paid firemen, that Mr. Colsey became a fire fighter. Strong fraternal feeling existed within the companies and there was intense rivalry with other companies. It showed itself in the speed with which alarms were answered as well as in the elaborate decorations of the apparatus.

As a led of 16 Colsey became a member of the Black Joe Hose Company. One of the big thrills of his career came during his first year of service, when fire destroyed the Crystal Palace, located in the undeveloped part of the city in what is now Bryant Park, alongside the old reservoir. This was regarded as one of the most spectacular blazes of all time, in the face of which the streams of water poured by the volunteers from the adjoining reservoir were entirely futile.

Five years later, during the Civil War draft riots Mr. Colsey was in at another fire in the same neighborhood. Rioters set fire to the Colored Orphan Asylum on Forty-third Street and burned it to the ground. Although the firemen could do little with the flames, they busied themselves rescuing the children and in protecting them from the mob which was still milling about in an angry mood.

The third historical fire which Mr. Colsey remembers as part of his New York career was that which destroyed Barnum's Museum. It was soon after that that the paid department was organized in the city, and in 1872 Mr. Colsey moved to Nyack, where volunteers still did the community fire fighting.

DETECTIVES BLOCK $85,000 'SWINDLE'

VICTIM SOUGHT PARTNER

But Policemen, on Tip, Hide in Near-By Office and Balk Closing of the Deal.

Three men were arrested early yesterday morning by New York and Jersey City detectives on complaint of Ernest Correale, Jersey City billiards supply manufacturer, who charged them with conspiracy to defraud him of $85,000. One of the men, Anthony Burns, 27 years old, was arrested at the Hotel Manger, New York, at which he was staying, and when arraigned in West Side Court as a fugitive from justice from New Jersey was held in $2,500 bail for hearing tomorrow.

His alleged accomplices, John Sullivan, 24, of 2 Shippen Street, Cambridge, Mass., and John Gennelle, 30, of 6 Bennett Street, Cambridge, are held in $25,000 bail each for hearing tomorrow in First Criminal Court, Jersey City, on the conspiracy charge. Both Sullivan and Burns have several aliases, the police said.

Advertised for Partner.

According to Correale, whose supply manufactory is at 349 West Side Avenue, Jersey City, he recently advertised for a partner to invest $50,000 in his business, which is worth about $85,000. He said he received an answer by wire from a "John Dwyer" of Cambridge, who said he was flying to Jersey City to study the proposition.

Early the next day, Mr. Correale said, a man, dressed as an aviator, entered his factory and said he was "Dwyer." He spoke of extensive financial dealings and offered to invest $100,000 in the business if Mr. Correale would incorporate and turn the stock and notes over to him. As a proof of his "good faith," it was said he offered to deposit $10,000 with the supply manufacturer and would have two of his friends do the same, providing that Mr. Correale also would raise a similar amount.

While Mr. Correale was considering this offer, Dwyer, who was identified yesterday as Burns, went to New York leaving his two friends, Sullivan and Gennelle, to clinch the deal. At the same time the Jersey City police received a "tip" on the pending transaction and Detectives John Gunbrecht and William Maher were told to do a little quiet investigating.

Detectives on the Trail.

They went to a room adjacent to Mr. Correale's office, heard several of the business discussions of the two men and, in their spare time, began checking up on the financial status of the would-be investors. They reported to Inspector John Underwood and Acting Captain Lynch that the men's assets were hidden; so well hidden, in fact, as to be invisible. They were told to make the arrests.

The detectives went into action yesterday and arrested Sullivan at Mr. Correale's office. Gennelle, they said, attempted to escape, but was caught in the street. Mr. Correale, when told that the men were not capitalists, admitted that he had been on the point of giving them $10,000 and had intended to incorporate and transfer to them all the stock in his corporation. Burns's arrest in New York followed.

All three denied there was anything "shady" about their offer and said they had no intention of defrauding Mr. Correale. They admitted being without funds temporarily, the police said, but insisted they could have "floated" an amount greater than the $50,000 for which Mr. Correale advertised.

RIVAL VAMPS STAGE RACE TO PUT OUT FIRE

The long-standing rivalry between the two companies composing the Gerrittsen Beach Vounteer Fire Department, said to be the only active organization of volunteer firemen left within the city limits, culminated yesterday with a fire-fighting contest between the two, staged before 5,000 cheering partisans.

A two-story frame shack filled with kindling material had been erected for the contest on Gerrittsen Avenue, half a mile from the fire house at Seba Avenue and Frank Court, Sheepshead Bay. It had been placed carefully so that it was too far from other buildings to endanger them and so that the two companies might race to it by different but equally lengthy routes.

When it was touched off at 11 A. M. Company 1, led by Battalion Chief Norman Page, was away before the reverberations of the tocsin had ceased. Company 2, under the command of Lieutenant Archie Cameron, was not so fortunate. While his fellow-members reviled him, one fireman of Company 2 held up the departure by insisting there was a leak in the apparatus.

He was overruled, but the delay had been fatal. Speed as they would, Company 2 could not make up the start obtained by their rivals and, when they arrived at the blaze, Company 1 already had its hose attached to a hydrant and a ladder against the burning structure. Although Company 2 speedily joined in, by the rules of the contest Company 1 was the winner.

All was far from calm and peaceful within the ranks of Company 2 last night. The general feeling seemed to be, as one member put it: "What if there really had been a leak? We could have squirted it on the fire and had another stream to our credit."

Late into the night the argument continued, with the crestfallen individual who had caused the delay still insisting that he had been right.

STAMFORD WOMAN SETS HERSELF AFIRE

Dentist's Wife Ends Life by Pouring Kerosene Over Clothing and Applying Match.

STAMFORD, Conn., Aug. 31.—Pouring kerosene over her clothing, Mrs. Nettie Decamp, 50 years old, the wife of Charles A. Decamp, a dentist, applied a match to herself at her home here this forenoon. Burned from head to foot before her husband and neighbors could extinguish the flames, she died three hours later in Stamford Hospital.

Dr. Ralph W. Crane, medical examiner, in his report to Coroner John J. Doten, gave the cause of death as suicide by incineration.

Mrs. Decamp, a trained nurse, suffered a severe scalp injury in an automobile accident on Aug. 17 and, according to neighbors, had been acting queerly since then.

At the hospital, just before she lapsed into a coma, she made this statement to the attending physician and nurses:

"I covered myself with kerosene oil and then applied a match to my clothes. I did it myself for my sins. I am a traitor."

TORNADO TAKES LIFE AT HOUSTON AIRPORT

HOUSTON, Texas, Aug. 31 (AP).—Roaring from a blackened sky, a tornado, accompanied by a severe electrical storm with a deluge of rain, struck the Houston Municipal Airport and vicinity today, causing the loss of one life, damaging two hangars and demolishing a garage.

William A. Glover, 73 years old, who resided near the flying field, was killed when a bolt of lightning struck a tree under which he was seated as the second tornado within a month struck the airport.

A heavy downpour of rain which followed the storm flooded Houston streets and disrupted traffic.

Five Youths and Weapons Taken—Woman Held as Witness.

Five youths, believed to be members of a gang responsible for several restaurant hold-ups recently, were arrested early yesterday and held on charges of felonious assault, robbery or violation of the Sullivan law. One woman, arrested in an apartment described by the police as a hang-out of the gang, was held as a material witness.

The arrests began when detectives and patrolmen noticed three men loitering at First Avenue and 105th Street at 4 A. M. The policemen searched them, finding two pistols, a pair of smoked glasses and a pair of brass knuckles.

The three gave their names as John Abassi, 18 years old, of 334 East 105th Street; Joseph Mallizzia, 18, of 336 East 114th Street, and Dominick Moscia, 18, of 320 East 102d Street. According to the police, they admitted ten recent hold-ups, and said they had a rendezvous at 298 First Avenue. There the police found James Mairo, 20, and Mrs. Mary Rizzo, 21, his sister, as well as three weapons, ammunition and smoked glasses.

The last arrest was made while the police watched the entrance to the First Avenue premises from across the street. A man alighted from a cab and entered a coffee pot restaurant next door. The police followed him in, searched him and found a pistol. He gave his name as Albert Tramaglino, 22, of 205 First Avenue.

The Florida, with the Mayor aboard, came into port here yesterday morning. Mayor Walker left the ship yesterday for a short walk about the grounds of the Montauk Club, adjoining the Montauk Casino which was raided as a gambling house on Aug. 23. FALL ON THIRD RAIL KILLS BOY ON OUTING

CROSS TRACKS TO SAVE FARE

Then Youngster Slips as He Waves to Girl to Follow—Police Called to Extricate Body.

James J. Thompson, 7 years old, of 378 Myrtle Avenue, Brooklyn, was burned to death late yesterday afternoon on the third rail at the Tompkins Avenue station of the Lexington Avenue elevated line, not far from his home. His sister, Mildred, 11, and Angelo La Mura, 10, a playmate, witnessed his death.

The children were returning from a day's outing at Coney Island when the accident happened. They had left their home after breakfast and for seven hours they took in the sights at the beach. Among them they had only $1. They went on a few of the rides, had some cold drinks and started home.

Excited and happy, they boarded a train that took them to Bridge Street. There they transferred to a Lexington Avenue train, but they were so busy talking over what they had seen that they passed Vanderbilt Avenue station, where they had intended to get off. They alighted at Tompkins Avenue, the next stop, planning to take a train back.

At Tompkins Avenue there is no connection between the north and south platforms. To get to the other side the children would have to pay another fare, and they had no more money. It did not occur to them to take the next train to a double-platform station; instead, they decided to cross the tracks to get to the other side. They walked to the far end of the platform, where a flight of steps leads to the ties.

Angelo slipped down first and gingerly picked his way across. He reached the steps on the opposite side, clambered up and waved to the others to follow. Little James went next. He negotiated the distance safely, but when he got across turned to wave to his sister. He slipped, his face came in contact with the rail and his leg made contact with a metal projection. Sparks flashed from the spot.

Mildred screamed and her cries brought several men and women to the scene. A patrolman tried to get the body, but was not properly equipped for the task. He sent in a call for the emergency squad from Herbert Street station and it arrived a few minutes later, headed by Sergeant Michaels.

Patrolman George Gerhardt, a member of the squad, donned a pair of rubber gloves and lifted the body. It was taken to the platform and, after an ambulance surgeon had worked over it in vain, the squad wagon took it to the Gates Avenue precinct.

Mrs. Mabel Thompson, a widow, was waiting for the children when the policeman called and notified her of the accident.

HOLIDAY DRY COURT FOR BROOKLYN TODAY

Twenty-nine arraignments in Manhattan and nine in Brooklyn was the grist for the Sunday Federal prohibition courts. In Manhattan there will be no court held by a commissioner today, and prohibition violators arrested yesterday will have to remain in jail until tomorrow morning. In Brooklyn, however, a commissioner will sit for the first time on a holiday.

Nearly all of those arraigned yesterday were held in bail of $500 or $1,000, for hearings within the next three weeks, on charges of possession and maintenance of nuisances. In Brooklyn one defendant received an immediate hearing and was discharged, and another, charged with maintaining a still, was held in $2,500 bail.

The discharged man was Arthur Abehamsen, 21 years old, of 22 Manhassett Place, Brooklyn, arrested in a bungalow at 113 Fourth Avenue, Midland Beach, S. I., by Patrolman James M. Carroll, who was sent to the bungalow to investigate noises which had annoyed neighbors. He said he found the defendant, several other youths, and a gallon tin containing a quantity of alcohol. The bungalow was rented by Abehamsen's father, who was in court. Father and son denied knowledge of the alcohol, and Commissioner Edward E. Fay dismissed the charges.

The alleged still was operated at 537 Gates Avenue, Brooklyn. The defendant, Joseph Turner, of 473 Gates Avenue, admitted to police having rented a floor there a week ago, but denied knowledge of the still.

Commissioner Francis A. O'Neill presided at the Manhattan court. He fixed Sept. 16 as the date for hearings in the twenty-nine cases arraigned before him.

BORGLUM BACK IN ATLANTA.

Confers on Stone Mountain Plans Without Notice of Indictment.

ATLANTA, Ga., Aug. 31 (AP).—Limping noticeably, supported by two walking sticks, from a severely sprained ankle suffered while giving final instructions on the gigantic Black Hills (South Dakota) monument, Gutzon Borglum, the sculptor, arrived here today to confer with leaders of a movement to resume work on the Confederate memorial at Stone Mountain.

The sculptor was not molested by officers in connection with two indictments still pending in De Kalb County charging Mr. Borglum with having demolished certain models and carried away others after the expiration of his contract with the Stone Mountain Memorial Association in 1925.

Solicitor General Claude Smith of the De Kalb Superior Court had previously stated that the sculptor was subject to arrest the moment he entered the State. Mr. Smith could not be reached for a statement as to whether or not Mr. Borglum would be called to face the charges in the indictments.

Mr. Borglum went directly to the home of Mayor-elect James L. Key, who had invited the sculptor here for a conference, and also saw there J. Lawrence McCord, another leader in the movement.

More than 400 citizens of De Kalb County have signed a petition to Mr. Smith asking him to drop the charges against Mr. Borglum.

HARRISON ROBERTSON,
Chief of Editorial Staff,
Courier-Journal, Louisville, Ky.

Of all newspapers published, The New York Times most nearly covers the entire news field. It is distinctly a newspaper, the one journal that may be turned to at any time for the news of the world. It is conducted with a true conception not only of what news is, but of the relative values of different kinds of news. It presents the news of the day fairly, comprehensively, uncontaminated by the tawdry sensationalism that afflicts so many of its contemporaries. It has won recognition as the monumental exponent of genuine journalism. * *

JOHN C. SHAFFER,
The Shaffer Newspapers,
Denver, Col.

* * The New York Times has set a standard of journalism that is not surpassed by any newspaper published in the United States While The Times has a large and worthy circulation, the success of the paper is not determined by the number of copies it prints, but by the ethical standard of its pages. The university is not to be commended because of a large enrollment of students, but solely on the character of scholars that it produces, and so it is with the newspaper. The success of a newspaper should be measured by the character of citizenship that it creates.

Publisher,
The New Orleans Item.

* * The New York Times is invaluable to our editors in their work, because it contains the most complete chronicle of the day's news which comes to us. Printing the news fully and without color is of invaluable service to the American people and to the people of the world. The Times does this. The standards of The Times are clean, high, intelligent and tolerant standards. The New York Times is a great newspaper in a city of great newspapers. It is more than that—a national institution * * which contributes in no small part to the greatness of America.

* * The circulation of The New York Times is natural and deserved. "Age has not withered its infinite variety." On the contrary, The Times grows better every year. Its large circulation is not won by sensational appeals or unreliable stories. The character of its journalism reflected in the news and editorial columns of The Times is a high tribute to its publisher.

* * The New York Times has profoundly influenced American journalism as a whole. The lesson has been that the greatest, most enduring success is won, not by the methods of the medicine show, but by doing every day that least spectacular yet most impressive thing, telling the news, all of it, in matchless completeness, without distorted emphasis, without cheap straining for effect, soberly, and with utter fairness. * *

MILLIONS AT BEACHES AS RUSH HOME BEGINS

All-Summer Vacationists Start Back as Other Throngs Go to Escape Heat or for Holiday.

CITY STREETS DESERTED

Shore Resorts Jammed and the Roads Clogged by Traffic as Ideal Weather Prevails.

PEAK OF RETURN TONIGHT

Estimates Put Total Out of Town at 3,500,000—Temperature Climbs to 84 in Mid-Afternoon.

With approximately 2,500,000 of its inhabitants out of town as Summer and Labor Day vacationists and with more than an additional 1,000,000 away at local beaches disporting themselves and seeking relief from the heat, New York City presented the appearance of a deserted metropolis yesterday.

The streets were virtually empty except for little knots of one-day excursionists who stood on the pavements and looked at the tall buildings. Save for taxicabs most motor licenses seen on the streets were those of other States.

The Pennsylvania Railroad reported that it was handling heavy traffic last night and that it was made up largely of one-day excursionists returning home. Extra trains for the excursionists were run to Pittsburgh, Baltimore and other points in the South. Trains in addition to those on regular schedule were still run over the Pennsylvania to Atlantic City, Asbury Park and Long Branch, carrying holiday-makers to the seashore resorts for Labor Day.

The one-day excursionists to the city accounted for ten extra sections run by the New York Central. Otherwise the Sunday traffic on the New York Central, the Pennsylvania and other railroads was about normal for a dull Sunday.

Hot weather, with the temperature highest at 3 P. M., when the mercury was at 84 and the humidity at 45, sent great crowds to the near-by beaches. The thermometer climbed from 70 at 6 A. M., when the humidity was 70, to the peak, and then began to drop slowly. The local weather forecast for today was partly cloudy, probably light local showers this morning, not much change in temperature and moderate east to southeast winds. The heat of yesterday was tempered by moderate humidity and a sixteen-mile south wind that had shifted from the northeast at 11 A. M.

The prospects for pleasant holiday weather throughout the East seemed to be good last night. Rains were reported general over the Ohio Valley and southward to the Gulf of Mexico.

The crowd at Coney Island was counted by the police at 750,000, and they went in bathing in such numbers that there was little more than standing room. The Rockaways reported 300,000 and Atlantic City estimated that it had 200,000 visitors. Coney Island, Rockaway and New Jersey resort hotels were practically booked to capacity or expected to be filled by morning when the full complement of Labor Day visitors had arrived.

Despite the great crowds at Coney Island, there was little disorder and the police records for the day showed only two cases requiring medical attention. Mrs. Ida Rosenberg, 40 years old, of 2,323 East Twenty-first Street, Sheepshead Bay, while bathing from the Brighton Beach Baths at the foot of Coney Island Avenue dislocated her shoulder in diving. She was treated on the beach and removed to Coney Island Hospital.

Mrs. Tillie Kasnick, 23, of 2,784 West Twenty-first Street, Coney Island, was treated for heart disease and shock and sent home.

The police of Coney Island found their most difficult task that of clearing the beaches of between seventy-five and 100 peddlers and in restoring about 100 lost children to excited parents.

Scare at Coney Island.

With 300,000 holiday visitors at the Rockaways, the police and beach guards had reported no casualties late last night.

The Long Island State Park Commission estimated that more than 125,000 holiday visitors had visited the parks under its jurisdiction yesterday. The largest crowd was at Jones's Beach Park, where 70,000 spent the day and 40,000 went in bathing.

From Atlantic City came reports that beach officials estimated that the 200,000 already there would be augmented by 100,000 during the evening and this morning. Promenaders thronged the boardwalk throughout the day.

Additional visitors were arriving there by special trains run every few minutes over the Pennsylvania Railroad from New York and Philadelphia and also over the Philadelphia & Reading system. Traffic over the boulevards by bus and private motor car reached peak holiday volume. The weather at Atlantic City was alternately clear and cloudy and sultry.

The crowd at Asbury Park and near-by resorts was estimated at more than 250,000 and visitors were still arriving last night. Parked cars extended in solid lines for blocks along the curbs of side streets from the ocean front. Bathers filled the beaches and had ideal weather and water conditions. Heavy motor traffic was accompanied by numerous minor accidents.

In Westchester County, where all the main highways were open and there were few detours on secondary roads, traffic moved without interruption in huge volume, according to police reports. More than 15,000 visitors went bathing from the beach at Playland at Rye. More than 7,500 visited the amusement park. Tonight will mark the closing of the Summer season for many of the beach and yacht clubs along the Hudson River and Long Island Sound at which dinners and dances will be held in the evening, following yacht racing and water sports in the afternoon.

The new $380,000 highway connection at Kensico Dam between the Bronx River Parkway and Bedford Road, the route to the Berkshires, was formally opened yesterday by County Engineer Charles MacDonald.

Vacationists Rush Homeward.

While thousands of additional motorists hurried out of town at the eleventh hour yesterday the volume of motor traffic outward bound was greatly exceeded by the inbound movement of automobiles representing the vanguard of the Summer vacationists hurrying home ahead of the great rush that is expected tonight, when the bulk of the 2,500,000 who are out of town try to return all at once by rail, water, motor and by air.

The returning Summer vacationists were distinguishable by the piles of luggage strapped to bumpers, battened down upon running boards, on rear luggage carriers and even on the tops of automobiles as well as between front mudguards and hoods. They were in evidence at all the tollgates, at the Holland Tunnels as well as at Bear Mountain Bridge.

In the twenty hours between Saturday midnight and 10 o'clock last night 48,166 automobiles passed through the Hudson Tunnels. Almost two-thirds of these, it was said, came from the New Jersey side at an estimated average through the afternoon of about 1,500 an hour.

Exact figures of Bear Mountain Bridge traffic were not available but it was estimated late last night that about 9,000 automobiles had crossed the bridge during the day.

Caraway Gives Up Flying; Couldn't Get His "Air Legs."

WASHINGTON, Aug. 30 (AP).—Senator Thaddeus H. Caraway of Arkansas said today: "I'm through with flying till I get to be an angel."

He reached this conclusion, he said, on an air voyage from Washington to Sedalia, Mo., and back. Traveling in a small land plane with an open cockpit, he was airsick before he reached St. Louis. He hoped it might be different in another plane. But it was not.

"Before we got to St. Louis, on the way back, I was just as sick," he said, "but I got another plane there."

SCORES LABOR CHIEF FOR ROOSEVELT AID

Asserting that the State Federation of Labor's thirteen legislative proposals were virtually ignored by the Legislature at its last session, Louis Waldman, Socialist candidate for Governor, in a Labor Day statement yesterday criticized William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, for his recent endorsement of Governor Roosevelt. Mr. Waldman declared that Governor Roosevelt had thrown labor only a few crumbs, for which the Republican legislators were entitled to a share of the credit.

"The year which has passed since we last commemorated Labor Day has been exceptionally trying," Mr. Waldman said. "The fool's paradise in which many workers dwelt has gone and in place of the prosperity which they were told assured them against the ordinary risks of capitalism they found themselves, many millions strong, searching for opportunity to find employment.

"Starvation and ruin supplanted the glowing descriptions of the new capitalism, which only brought new and more privations to the workers and the consumers. Labor Day, 1930 finds the depression as bad as ever, unemployment as extensive as ever and the welfare of the people as remote as ever from the minds of the intrenched ruling powers.

"President Green has shown himself a political novice in venturing into the political situation in New York State. If adhered to by the rank and file of the labor movement, his policy seriously impaired the fighting powers of the organized labor movement of our State. Fortunately, the trend is in the direction of a more progressive policy, and the workers cannot be carried in a policy that hopelessly divides their strength and renders them impotent as a political force in our State.

"If Governor Roosevelt has been responsible for the signing of measures helpful to the workers of our State, surely the Republican Legislature, which enacted the measures, was helpful; and if he, a Democrat, is entitled to the support of labor, why deny the same support to the Republicans without whom those measures could not reach the Governor? How, under the circumstances, are the workers to vote?

"The fact of the matter is that neither the Republican Legislature nor the Democratic Governor has helped in bringing appreciably nearer realization the very modest program of the New York State Federation of Labor.

"There were thirteen measures in which the State Federation of Labor was interested during the last session. In a bulletin issued by the federation on Aug. 31, summarizing the work of the session, the federation points out that most of them were not even considered, while the few that were taken up were so emasculated as to be of little value to labor. The injunction bill, for instance, was passed without containing any of the provisions necessary to make the remedy against injunctions effective.

"Many of these measures have been offered year after year. They will continue to be offered year after year. Organized labor in our State, dividing its forces and pursuing a policy which leads only to a blind alley, will remain impotent—unless it awakens to the need of a new and better policy."

MUSTE URGES LABOR TO ORGANIZE PARTY

A call to organized labor to intensify organization of Southern textile workers, to organize a labor party, to emphasize the need for unemployment insurance and to promote unionization work in the basic industries was contained in a Labor Day message issued yesterday by A. J. Muste, chairman of the Conference for Progressive Labor Action and president of Brookwood Labor College.

The message assails the policies of the American Federation of Labor as inadequate and criticizes severely President Hoover and his administration on questions affecting labor and those arising from the industrial depression.

"Unemployment and poverty," reads the message, "have made the workers ready to listen to the message of a militant, progressive, intelligent labor movement, cutting itself off from the old political parties and standing squarely on its feet in the political as well as the economic field."

Accusing the American Federation of Labor of failing to redeem its pledges to organize the Southern textile workers, Mr. Muste's statement takes the federation to task for spending too much effort in seeking to "sell" its type of unionism.

"Labor during the coming year must wage a much more militant campaign in the South and put the emphasis on arousing the Southern textile workers to struggle for their rights," Mr. Muste declares.

The official policies of the federation in dealing with the effects of the industrial depression "have in the main been sadly lacking in vigor and aggressiveness and much too subservient to the essentially anti-labor Hoover Administration," according to Mr. Muste. In addition to what he terms the aid given by the A. F. of L. to the administration last September in "singing the chorus of Republican prosperity instead of taking measures to deal with the depression which had already set in," Mr. Muste says, federation leaders "did not deal squarely with the workers" in presenting the real facts of the situation before them, and joined President Hoover in his position that the workers should ask for no wage increases while the crisis lasted.

Industrialists, on the other hand, have failed to keep their promise to the President not to reduce wages, Mr. Muste charges, saying "there have been hundreds of instances where wage rates have been cut."

GREEN PRAISES AID OF CHURCH TO LABOR

At Washington Service He Says Religion Substituted Reason for Force in Industry.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31.—Gathered on a hilltop in the shadow of the Washington Cathedral, several thousand persons today attended services in honor of National Labor Sunday and heard William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, appeal for wider application of religious principles in business relations.

Members of seventy-five local labor unions were in the congregation that grouped close to the peace cross on the cathedral grounds.

Although absent from the city, the Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, sent a message which stated that "the Church must more and more relate itself intelligently and sympathetically to the large concerns of industry."

Mr. Green paid particular tribute to the "special attention shown by Church and religious organizations in industrial problems," saying:

"In the pulpits and in the churches the relation of religion and the application of religious formulae to the solution of modern-day industrial problems are considered and presented in a most sincere and logical way."

Remarking that science and human skill have been united to make an industrial revolution in this country, Mr. Green said that failure to solve problems attendant on this growth "has resulted in social unrest, industrial strife and financial waste."

He added: "If equilibrium is to be maintained and the cause of industrial peace advanced, a balanced relationship must be established between the forces of industry.

"The essence of religion is found in every rule, regulation and standard adopted and applied through mutual agreement to human conduct and human relations in industry. It is the inspiring influence which causes human beings to recognize and respect the common elemental rights of all, substituting reason for brute force and the conference room for the industrial battlefield.

"The policy of collective bargaining and wage agreements, with the resultant stabilization of industry and the arbitration of industrial disputes through the creation of arbitration tribunals by mutual understanding, rests upon the basis of a high ethical standard and the doctrine, teachings and precepts of religion.

"The simple process of righteous dealing, reciprocal good-will, mutual respect and a strict adherence to the principles of justice and honesty conforms to the teaching of religion and morality relating to human relations in business and industry as expounded by our Lord, Moses and the prophets.

"We would know little about ethics, justice, righteousness or morality, if we did not first know something about religion and the philosophy of religion. Our system of jurisprudence and of law is largely based upon the Ten Commandments and the law as expounded by Moses."

The music, which was broadcast over the Columbia network, was furnished by men and boys from the choirs of many of Washington's churches.

Local Dialect Clings to Famous Americans; Accents Studied in the Speeches of Fifty

How geographical peculiarities of speech persist in America despite the leveling influence of education is shown in a report just submitted to the journal American Speech by Professor Harry M. Ayres and Professor W. Cabell Greet of Columbia University, who are engaged in a detailed study of the characteristics of American dialects.

More than 200 phonograph records, including fifty speeches by famous men, have been collected by the two professors, emphasizing clearly the persistence of the dry New England manner of speech, the Southern drawl, Pennsylvania Dutch rising inflections, the Western twang and the niceties of "fronting," "cupping" and "vowel-gliding" characteristic of the sounds emitted by Americans in various parts of the country.

Not only do the records show the larger and broader differences of speech, but also local peculiarities.

The collection obtained by the Columbia professors, says Science Service, contains 150 copies of the same story, "Grip the Rat," but every copy of the story is spoken by a different American voice. The two professors have been aided in collecting varieties of American speech by the fact that the 14,000 Summer school students at the university have a convenient custom of gathering beneath trees named for their States. On the campus can be picked out and sorted many dialects, pure and mixed.

The report goes into detail regarding differences in specific vowels and consonants in various parts of the United States and Canada. The typical New Englander of the coast speaks with a sharp attack and brisk utterance. The vowel "a," which is one of the letters which have a vivid and changeable personality on the American tongue, is most typically New England in asked, aunt and can't where the tone is placed far front. In barn the "a" is located slightly further back, and the professors explained that in no case is this sound as far back as in the ordinary American pronunciation of father.

The mountain New Englander has "a slow, elegiac cast in his speech tune, a certain doubt as to the advisability of proceeding, coupled with a resigned acceptance of the necessity of doing so," the report explains. The "a" sound in this region is shorter than in the speech of the sea coast.

Records of the various speech types of a single community, Williamsburg, Va., were this Summer gathered under the direction of Professor Greet, and should yield interesting results, Professor Ayres says.

GIRL DIES IN FALL; TWO MEN QUERIED

Two Chicagoans Were on Way to Massachusetts to Spend Their Vacation.

Joseph Cummings, 31 years old, a Chicago attorney, and George Jaeger, 30 years old, a broker of the same city, were taken to the East Fifty-first Street police station for questioning last night after Miss Gertrude Burke, 25 years old, of 100 Avenue D, fell from the window of an apartment they were using on the second floor of a converted brown-stone front apartment house at 23 East Fifty-fifth Street. Miss Burke died of a fractured skull in Flower Hospital early this morning.

According to the police, Miss Burke and two girl companions, Ida and Nettie Goldman, sisters, of 871 Longwood Avenue, the Bronx, were walking up Fifth Avenue last night, after attending a motion-picture show at a Broadway theatre, when Cummings and Jaeger invited them to go to their apartment for a drink. The girls accepted the invitation. All four got into a taxicab and drove to the Princeton Club, at Park Avenue and Thirty-ninth Street.

Then, after picking up some baggage the men had left at the club, they drove to the apartment, which is occupied by Egerton B. Vinson of New York. Vinson, whose name appears in the Social Register, had told Cummings and Jaeger that they might use "the apartment while he was absent from the city.

The Goldman sisters remained in the apartment only about half an hour. Then they started for home. They were leaving the front door when Ida Goldman heard Miss Burke calling her by name, and looking up saw the later come hurtling down from a window. She struck head first on the sidewalk.

The two sisters summoned Patrolman Swisek of the Easty Fifty-first Street Station, who called an ambulance. Then they accompanied him back to the apartment where he got Cummings and Jaeger and took them to the police station.

They said that Miss Burke had gone to the window to say good-bye to the Goldman sisters and was leaning against a heavy wire screen when the screen collapsed and she fell out.

Cummings is a son of Edmund S. Cummings, a Chicago attorney. Young Cummings and Jaeger were on their way to Cape Cod to spend their vacation with Jaeger's parents and had stopped off in New York over night.

BROUN, CRITICIZED, DEFENDS CANDIDACY

Replies at Labor College to Charge That His Policy Supports Capitalism.

FAVORS PRACTICAL ISSUES

Other Conference Speakers Say Depression Speeds Forming of New Party for Workers.

KATONAH, N. Y., Aug. 31.—Heywood Broun, Socialist candidate for Congress, speaking at the Labor Day week-end conference called by the Conference for Progressive Labor Action at Brookwood Labor College today, defended himself and his fellow-candidates from the charge that by basing their campaign in New York to a considerable extent on immediate issues, such as civic honesty and the elimination of graft, they had compromised with their ultimate aim of working for the establishment of the cooperative commonwealth.

Mr. Broun's defense was made after Ludwig Lore, editor of The New Yorker Volks Zeitung, a "revolutionary Socialist," had declared that the "capitalist class" was jubilant over such Socialist candidates as Mr. Broun, Norman Thomas and ex-Justice Jacob Panken. The gist of Mr. Lore's criticism was that for fifteen years the American Socialist party had been reformistic and that by trying to please the "non-revolutionary elements" it had lost the support of the revolutionary adherents. In effect, he said, the Socialists in this country and in Europe had by their policy supported and strengthened the capitalistic state.

In reply, Mr. Broun said he saw no reason why his willingness to accept anybody's vote should be construed as "treason to the working class." He saw no harm in making honesty in civic life an issue in the campaign, he declared, and he had no objection if a man voted for him and disbelieved in the Socialist party program.

Such a voter, he said, was a Socialist voter anyway and might even get the habit of voting Socialist. He scorned as impractical Mr. Lore's viewpoint concerning his unconscious support of capitalism. To intelligent capitalists, he said, it made no difference that Broun and Thomas were running for office, for they saw that there were no members in Congress to put through measures.

It was more important for Socialists to emphasize Federal unemployment insurance, old-age pensions and free employment exchanges than to talk of government ownership of railroads, to which they were pledged anyway and which they could do nothing about for the present, he argued.

Mr. Broun did not deny that he was delighted with the amount of space his candidacy had received from the "capitalist" newspapers.

"Naturally, I would like a great deal of space if I can get it," he said. "I do deny that the editorial comment on my candidacy was favorable. One referred to me as a poker-player and another as a sun-dodger."

Others who addressed the meeting were A. J. Muste, dean of Brookwood Labor College; Tom Tippett, extension director, and James O'Neal, editor of The News Leader. They agreed that the economic depression furnished fertile soil for work among trade unions for independent political action looking toward an independent labor party.

Mr. Muste said that it was significant that the convention of the State Federation of Labor last week had gone on record as favoring unemployment insurance and that the convention of the American Federation of Labor last year had favored old-age pensions.

Will Rogers Finds Nevada Is Freedom's Last Stand

TAHOE TAVERN, Cal., Aug. 31.—Just back from a rodeo over at a great little Western town called Winnemucca, Nev. That's a great State. When you feel that the people around you are taking too much care of your private business, why move to Nevada. It's freedom's last stand in America. Yet they don't do one thing that other States don't do.

Only they leave the front door open. You can get a divorce without lying, a drink without whispering and bet on a game of chance without breaking even a promise.

Yours,
WILL ROGERS.

DENIES SPEEDING UP OF PUBLIC WORKS

INDIFFERENCE IS CHARGED

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31.—The Hoover Administration has done little to speed up public works, and $25,992,562 less has been appropriated for good roads, river and harbor work and hospitalization in 1931 than in the preceding year, Representative Joseph W. Byrns of Tennessee, ranking minority member of the House Appropriations Committee, said today in a statement issued through the Democratic National Committee.

Representative Byrns called attention to the assertion of Secretary Hyde on Aug. 17 that he had authorized "immediate apportionment of $121,875,000 of Federal funds to the several States for highway improvement, and that this was the Federal Government's first major step in carrying out its part of the nine-point program for drought relief."

"The very date of this announcement itself suggests haziness if not indifference to the unemployment situation and economic distress by the Hoover Administration," Mr. Byrns said.

"The prevailing serious depression began in October of last year. It became acute with the recent severe drought. This 'first step' comes just ten months after the depression of last October settled over the country, and this 'first step' is nothing more than an allotment to the States of funds that will not be available until the next fiscal year, which will be ushered in on July 1, 1931.

"For the fiscal year 1930, ended last June 30, the actual appropriation for road construction under the Federal aid plan was $117,060,000. For the present fiscal year, ending next June 30, it is $89,311,628, a decrease for this year of $27,748,372.

"For rivers and harbors work the appropriation for the fiscal year 1930 was $62,000,000. For the current fiscal year 1931 it is $55,000,000, a decrease of $7,000,000.

"For veterans' hospitalization for the 1930 fiscal year the appropriations were $14,000,000 and for the current year only $2,000,000, a decrease of $12,000,000.

"For military post construction work appropriations for 1930 were $14,441,950 and for 1931 they are $16,137,860, an increase for this year of $1,695,910.

"For public buildings for 1930 the appropriations were $41,235,500 and for 1931 they are $60,365,400, an increase of $19,129,900. In this item, mention may be made of the fact that $15,000,000 goes for building construction in the District of Columbia.

"Thus, there were decreases in three items—good roads, river and harbor work, and veterans' hospitalization, amounting to $46,748,372—and increases in appropriations for military construction and for public buildings amounting to $20,825,810, a net decrease in all the five items of $25,922,562.

"Thus, while all Federal appropriations for the fiscal year 1931 are approximately $459,000,000 more than the total of similar appropriations for 1930, there was an actual decrease of more than $25,000,000 in appropriations for work that would have helped to relieve the distress due to unemployment."

HOLZWORTH SEEKS AID OF 400 CENSUS-TAKERS

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., Aug. 31.—In another attempt to win the support of enrolled Republicans at the primary election on Sept. 16, John M. Holzworth, insurgent seeking the nomination, today was seeking 400 Twenty-fifth District Congressional experienced census takers to canvass the district for him.

This final move by Holzworth was ignored by members of the Westchester County Republican Committee, who will confer tomorrow with William L. Ward, Republican leader of the county, who has just returned from his Summer home in New Hampshire. Only the usual steps will be taken by the Ward organization to win support for the regular wet Republican candidate, Charles D. Millard, it was said.

Mr. Holzworth's most recent attack, in which he said he was not criticizing Ward, although in three radio addresses he bitterly assailed the leader's political methods, was ridiculed today by organization men. They said that Mr. Holzworth, ousted from the District Attorney's staff and denied a nomination for District Attorney, now is trying to disrupt the party in the county.

Mrs. Marion Booth Kelly, of Bronxville, chairman of the legislative committee of the Women's National Association for Prohibition Reform, which is headed by Mrs. Charles H. Sabin, announced that Mrs. Sabin would not be a speaker at the independent wet dinner and mass meeting to be held at Briarcliff Lodge Wednesday evening. The meeting is to further Holzworth's campaign. Mrs. Kelly said her organization considerd both Mr. Holzworth and Mr. Millard as wet and therefore satisfactory to it.

10,000,000 WOMEN IN 'GAINFUL' WORK

Census Also Enumerates 23,000,000 Housewives, Steuart Says Over the Radio.

47,000,000 BREAD WINNERS

Industry Supplants Agriculture as Main Support of Nation's 122,000,000 People.

STICKS TO 2,000,000 IDLE

Sickness, Vacations, Days Off, Part Time and Unemployment Make 9,000,000 Not Working.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31.—Summarizing census data on what the people are doing for a living, William M. Steuart, director of the census, told the radio audience tonight that of more than 122,000,000 people in the United States about 47,000,000 are engaged in bread-winning work. These because of days off, vacations, sickness and part time employment work about 275 days a year, or three-fourths of the time on an average. There are 38,000,000 males and 37,000,000 females between the ages of 16 and 64.

"While the count has not yet been made," he said, "it is probable that about 49,000,000 people told the census enumerators last April that they had some gainful occupation. Some of them were not actually engaged in this occupation at the time of the enumeration, some were sick, some were on vacations and some reported that they could find no work to do, though they were able and willing to work and were looking for a job. There were others who, while they were working, were not working full time, being idle part of the days of the week, or part of the normal working hours in each day.

"It is probably true that under present normal industrial and business conditions there are not more than 40,000,000 or 42,000,000 people in this country who, on a given day, are at work full time on a gainful occupation. Figures indicate that during last April there were more than 2,000,000 people who usually work at a gainful occupation who had no job, people who were able to work and looking for a job but could not find it.

Do Not Work All Time.

The workers, as a rule, do not work all the time. They have at least one day off in a week, usually Sunday, and perhaps have half of Saturday. Many of them have some vacation, perhaps two weeks or a month, and in some occupations more. Some of them are engaged in seasonal occupations, which are carried on only in certain months of the year. Sickness interferes with continuous employment. There are many other reasons why work is not continuous.

"Probably it is safe to say that, on the average, the gainful workers do not work more than 275 days in the year. So it may be said that the population of more than 122,000,000 is mainly supported, so far as bread-winning labor is concerned, by about 47,000,000 people working about three-fourths of the time. It is their labor—aided, of course, by machinery and by the power applied through electricity, steam or other means—that produces the food, clothing, houses, automobiles and all the material goods that we may possess or enjoy, and supplies the professional and personal services that we may command."

"The largest number of males, about 11,000,000," Mr. Steuart said in speaking over the Columbia Broadcasting System, "are engaged in agriculture, forestry and animal husbandry. These assist in giving employment to about 12,000,000 engaged in the mechanical and manufacturing industries, of which agricultural machinery, fertilizer and numerous commodities required for the conduct of the farm are an important part."

Of those engaged in agricultural pursuits, Mr. Steuart said, there are about 6,000,000 farmers and about 4,000,000 farm laborers.

"About one-third of the total number of workers are engaged in manufacturing or mechanical pursuits, a larger number than in agriculture. It was not always so.

"In the early days of the republic agriculture was the predominant occupation, and if we go back only fifty years to the census of 1880 we find that 45 per cent of the gainful workers were engaged in agriculture, as compared with only 25 per cent at the present time, and that the farmers and farm laborers outnumbered the workers in manufacturing and mechanical pursuits by more than 2 to 1.

"Since then, while the number of workers engaged in agriculture has increased about 40 per cent, the number of persons employed in manufacturing and mechanical pursuits has increased by over 200 per cent. From being predominantly an agricultural people we are coming to be predominantly a manufacturing people.

"In the conduct of business of all kinds, it is necessary to employ large numbers of clerks, stenographers, agents, bookkeepers and messenger boys. These occupations give employment to about 7 or 8 per cent of the total number of workers."

23,000,000 Work as Housewives.

Pointing out that women are now engaging more actively in industry, trade and office work than ever before, Mr. Steuart said that of the 37,000,000 females between the ages of 16 and 64 about 10,000,000 are employed in "gainful occupations."

"In addition to these 10,000,000 women in what we have termed 'gainful occupations,' however," he said, "there are perhaps 23,000,000 housewives engaged in the work of keeping their own homes, most of them doing themselves the major part of the work involved in keeping the home.

"Adding these housewives to the 10,000,000 classified for statistical purposes as 'gainful workers,' the total amounts to about 90 per cent of the whole number of women in the age group under consideration, or practically the same as the percentage of men in gainful occupations."

More than one-third of the population, said Mr. Steuart, or 41,000,000 people, are under 16 years of age, and, of these, 1,000,000 were reported in the 1920 census as having gainful occupations, "principally on the farm helping dad." But the number of workers under 16 in factories, stores and shops is decreasing, he said.

THE SCREEN

By MORDAUNT HALL.

Ufa's English Dialogue Film.

MELODY OF THE HEART, with Dita Parlo, Willy Fritsch, Geroe Maly, Marosa Simon, Janos Koermendy, Juliska D. Ligeti and others, produced by Ufa, directed by Hanns Schwarz; Ufa short sound films; Laurel and Hardy in a talking comedy. At the Fifth Avenue Playhouse.

Produced by Ufa, under the supervision of Erich Pommer, there is at the Fifth Avenue Playhouse "Melody of the Heart," the first English-speaking version of a Teutonic film to be offered in this country. The German original, known as "Melodie des Herzens," is being shown simultaneously at the Eighth Street Playhouse. The Berlin film-makers cannot point with any degree of pride to this effort, for aside from poor direction, inadequate vocal recording, childish dialogue, the story itself leaves one mystified as to why it was ever thought deserving of spending money on it to bring it to the screen.

While there is little to choose between the two editions of this production, the one in German at least has its deliberate dialogue spoken by native actors. The English copy, with the same players, has but one or two lines that are not uttered with a decided foreign accent. How the recording of the voices in this production has been accomplished is of small consequence, for it might have been preferable to have had still further haphazard synchronization than to have the lines spoken as they are, with ludicrous hesitation as well as a German accent.

This inept story tells of Julia Balog (Dita Parlo), a Hungarian servant girl, who falls in love with a soldier named Janos Garas (Willy Fritsch), the son of moderately well-to-do country folk. Julia is discharged by her mistress for staying out too late with Janos on the eve of his leaving with his regiment for military manoeuvres. The girl later frets over a bill she owes to a landlady, and the woman, after demanding payment, dilates upon the money Julia could make if she joined the feminine throng at the notorious Paradise Café. Julia is impelled to take up the sordid existence, so as to put by a comfortable sum that she believes will help her and Janos to marry so soon as Janos is discharged from the army.

Soon after Janos's return, however, he sees the once simple Julia, with painted lips and touched-up eyebrows, in the Paradise Café, and there ensues a futile attempt at a quasi satisfactory ending.

All this is set forth without a whit of imagination. There are long periods when no lines are spoken and none of the characters has a chance to be lonely, for no matter where they go they seem to be followed by an orchestra.

There have been many silly American productions, but none that falls as low as this. Hanns Schwartz is credited with the direction. He has only succeeded in causing Herr Fritsch and Fräulein Parlo, two ordinarily competent players, to give performances that make them look like amateurs.

Crooks Cheated.

OUTSIDE THE LAW, with Edward G. Robinson, Mary Nolan, Owen Moore, Edwin Sturgis, John George, Delmar Watson, De Witt Jannings, Rockliffe Fellowes, Frank Burke and Sydney Bracey, written by Tod Browning and Garrett Fort, directed by Mr. Browning. At the Globe.

Competent acting by the principals in "Outside the Law," a Tod Browning film which is now occupying the Globe screen, fails to atone for a flow of incredible incidents. This is another crook yarn in which the criminals are for a time clever enough to pull the wool over the eyes of the slow-witted police. In the end, however, the law has its way, which is something in favor of this picture.

Here one has a reprehensible character, named "Fingers" O'Dell, who, considering he is known to Cobra Collins, a gang leader, is expected to be no stranger to the police. He chooses to pose as an advertising "automaton" in a bank window, thus giving the minions of the law an opportunity to inspect his features while he is planning a robbery that he hopes will put him on easy street for the rest of his life. His companion in crime is Connie, played by Mary Nolan. Cobra Collins, who evidently thinks that he is entitled to a fifty-fifty share on all robberies in the neighborhood, quickly decides that O'Dell's advertising stunt conceals a plot to steal something like $500,000 in the bank's vaults. He therefore lets "Fingers" know that he wants half of the loot, failing which Mr. O'Dell's name will be mud.

Connie believes that she is shielding O'Dell from Collins, but the latter has too many underlings at work for her to do this successfully. She tells Collins that O'Dell does not intend "pulling his big trick" until the following week, but Collins receives a telephone message informing him that O'Dell is at that moment inside the bank. To prove how much he trusts her, Collins insists that Connie herself listen to the man on the other end of the wire.

Then one has an opportunity of studying O'Dell in the bank, hiding in a locker part of the time, as he listens to the night watchman. After he has succeeded in robbing the bank of the huge sum, O'Dell hides in an apartment which happens to be opposite one tenanted by a policeman. The producers then show that O'Dell, with all his love of loot and desire for crime, has a tender spot in his heart for children. He has an opportunity to reveal this virtue when the policeman's youngster comes to the O'Dell abode. It is, however, subsequently somewhat disconcerting for the crook when the child one day appears wearing his father's uniform cap.

Cobra Collins pays for his greed with his life. O'Dell and Connie are deprived of their ill-gotten gains and are sentenced to long terms in prison.

Miss Nolan gives a creditable showing as Connie. Edward G. Robinson imparts a good deal of strength to his interpretation of the rôle of Collins. Owen Moore does good work as O'Dell.

VON GRONAU IN NEWSREEL.

At Embassy He Stresses International Good Fellowship.

NEWSREELS, a compilation of Fox Movietone and Hearst Metrotone Newsreels, shown continuously at the Embassy Newsreel Theatre.

Captain Wolfgang von Gronau, who flew here from Germany in a Dornier-Wal hydroplane, appears on the screen of the Embassy with his three companion fliers and says:

"If my flight does nothing more, I wish it to serve as a gesture of good fellowship from my country to the United States and all countries on which we landed during our flight."

August Heckscher, discussing the aims of the Heckscher Foundation, explains:

"Our foremost duty in contact with children is to encourage self-expression. We can standardize their upbringing, education, treatment in disease, but we cannot standardize the child. Apply coercion and at some stage you will meet with rebellion."

Other views are of scenes at the Chicago air meet; former Governor Alfred E. Smith and Mayor Walker reviewing troops at the National Guard's Summer camp; Amy Johnson, the British woman flier, being welcomed in her home town in England; more Hindu riots with the police wielding sticks across the legs of the natives; a new method of fighting bulls in Spain by means of a vaulting pole; the Toronto men's swim for a prize of $10,000 and the introduction of the invading British polo players who are seen preparing for the international matches.

Other interesting subjects include a wedding ceremony performed inside a lion's cage; an ancient jousting match at Sete, France; the opening of the new mid-Hudson span; Annapolis turning out for football practice and Betty Nuthall winning the American tennis championship.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

Several of the Broadway attractions will play holiday matinees this afternoon.

Among the productions starting rehearsals today are the Theatre Guild's "Elizabeth, the Queen," with Lynn Fontanne and Alfred Lunt as the leading players, and "Mrs. Moonlight," the Charles Hopkins presentation, which will have Haidee Wright, Guy Standing and Edith Barrett in the chief rôles. Preparations for the new Ziegfeld show "Smiles," of which Marilyn Miller and the Astaires will be the stars, will begin tomorrow.

"An Affair of State," a play by Robert L. Buckner, is announced for production by Benjamin David, heretofore an actors' representative and vaudeville producer.

"Three's a Crowd," the revue in which Clifton Webb, Fred Allen and Libby Holman will be the leading performers, will not play its out-of-town engagement in Baltimore and Washington, as previously scheduled, but at Erlanger's Theatre, Philadelphia, beginning Sept. 29.

"A Midnight Call," a play written by Gennaro Mario Curci and W. Howard Harris, will go in rehearsal next week under the direction of Frances M. Verdi. Burns and Maisell will be the producers. "Barbara," another play by Mr. Curci, is now in rehearsal.

A troupe of Albertina Rasch dancers will sail on the Paris this afternoon to appear in Alfred Butt's forthcoming London revue.

The Minsky Brothers, who operate the National Winter Garden burlesque in East Houston Street, announce that they have arranged to furnish the script of a burlesque show to the Mutual Welfare League of Sing Sing prison, which plans to stage that type of entertainment as its annual Christmas week show.

Other theatrical news will be found on Page 10.

40,000 AT POLO GROUNDS

New York Club Five Games From Leading Cubs—Hogan Connects for Pinch Home Run.

By JOHN DREBINGER.

Prodigious were the deeds performed at the Polo Grounds yesterday by Melvin Ott, the silent little man who patrols right field for John McGraw. He hit three home runs in successive times at bat, to tie the modern major league record, the last one sailing right out of the park over the right field stands.

And yet, with all this noble effort, the Giants failed to derive all the profit that might have fallen to their lot, for after defeating the Braves in the first game of a double-header, 4 to 3, they lost the second, 14 to 10.

Thus, what would have been a gain of a game and a half on the league-leading Cubs resulted in an advance of only half a game, leaving the straining McGrawmen still five contests behind the leaders.

Ott's Total Now 22.

It was in that disastrous nightcap that Ott put on his gorgeous show to thrill a gallery of 40,000. In addition to these three circuit blows, which brought his seasonal total to twenty-two, he even tossed in a two-bagger and drove in exactly half a dozen runs. Frank Hogan, as pinch-hitter, also contributed a homer, but it all proved insufficient when the Giants' pitching staff crashed in a body as the Braves hammered four of McGraw's hurlers for eighteen hits.

Long George Kelly, now of the Cubs, hit three homers in successive times at bat while playing with the Giants in 1923. Babe Ruth of the Yanks and Chuck Klein of the Phils among others, also are credited with three successive homers, but their performances stretched over two games. Robert L. Lowe of the Braves in 1894 made four home runs in consecutive times at bat in one game.

Tiny Jim Chaplin was the first Giant flinger to go by the board. He merely collapsed under a six-run load which the Braves heaped upon him in the second inning. Then came Pete Donahue, who for a time did reasonably well, though tapped for a homer in the fifth by Sisler.

Giants Tie Score.

In the meantime the Giants, led by the indomitable Mel, strained on. A double by Roettger paved the way for their first tally in the third, they got another in the fourth when Ott stroked his first homer against the upper right tier, and in the fifth they threw the crowd in a frenzy as they routed Zachary to score five runs and tie the count, three riding home on Ott's second smash into the upper right tier.

But in the seventh, Donohue ged down to lose three runs. h Donohue and Pruett were mped for three more in the at and Parmalee, stepping to the und for the ninth, could not es pe getting slapped for a homer by atham.

That, of course, discounted everything, including the fact that Ott hammered still a third homer right over the roof of the grandstand with one on in the seventh and Hogan produced his four-base drive off Cantwell in the eighth.

One sharp, decisive thrust in the fourth inning in which the Giants routed Harry Seibold to score all of their four runs sufficed to overpower the Braves in the opener after the latter had started off rather gallantly against Pruett.

Two passes started Seibold on to a peck of trouble in the fourth. Singles by Roettger, Allen, who pinch-hit for Pruett; Leach and Lindstrom followed closely on the heels of the two walks and resulted in the cluster of four runs.

HALLAHAN CHECKS CUBS WITH 4 HITS

St. Louis Hurler Strikes Out Twelve to Give Team Victory by 8 to 3.

CHICAGO, Aug. 31 (AP).—Wild Bill Hallahan held the Cubs to four hits today and the St. Louis Cardinals trounced the National League champions, 8 to 3, to even the series at two each.

Outside of the eighth, when the Cubs bunched three of their safeties, Hallahan was in no danger, and embellished his triumph by striking out twelve men.

Jess Petty started for the Cubs, but was batted out of action in four innings. Guy Bush succeeded him and fared little better and Lynn Nelson and Al Shealy finished without further Cardinal scoring.

ROBINS' 23 HITS OVERWHELM PHILS

LUQUE HOLDS RIVALS AT BAY

By ROSCOE McGOWEN.

Collecting twenty-three hits off two southpaws, Lester Sweetland and George Hansen, including three home runs, the Robins yesterday overwhelmed the Phillies, 14 to 3. A crowd of 15,000 saw the encounter.

Circuit blows also accounted for all the Philly markers. Don Hurst getting the first one off Señor Adolfo Luque in the sixth with Chuck Klein on base and Pinky Whitney bouncing the second into the left-field seats in the ninth.

Such free and fancy hitting has not been displayed by the Brooklyn clan since the second game with the Cubs on the recent disastrous Western invasion, when the Flatbush howitzers were unlimbered against five Chicago pitchers for a total of eighteen hits, six of which were for extra bases.

Yesterday Rube Bressler, continuing a hitting streak begun at the Polo Grounds, came through with four straight hits and a sacrifice fly, giving him nine safeties in his last ten official trips to the plate. Besides his homer, Rube had a double and two singles. Wright had three out of five, as did Herman, Gilbert, Frederick and Luque.

Luque, who marked up his thirteenth victory of the year, held the Phillies helpless, with two meager singles until the sixth, when Klein uncorked a double and Hurst followed with his homer. Two useless singles were made off Luque in the seventh by Thevenow and Hansen, and Whitney's homer in the ninth completed the mild Philly assault on the Cuban.

NEWARK TAKES THE FINAL.

Special to The New York Times.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Aug. 31.—The Newark Bears scored their only victory of the four-game series with the Bisons by capturing the final today, 9 to 4. The locals succeeded in bombing Leo Mangum, one of their old mates, from the hill, but Speece easily quelled the late rally. Extra-base hitting by Layne and Jordan featured the Bears' attack on Fussell and Williams.

RIXEY OF THE REDS SUBDUES PIRATES

Scatters 9 Hits and Cincinnati Wins, 4-1, After Dropping 4 in Row to Rivals.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Aug. 31 (AP).—After taking four straight drubbings at the hands of the Pirates, the Reds arose today and took a 4-to-1 decision over Pittsburgh behind the splendid pitching of Eppa Rixey, who held the losers to nine scattered hits.

Rixey was never in danger except in the fifth inning, when the Pirates counted their only tally. Hemsley singled to centre with one out, and Rixey let loose a wild one that hit Brame on the hand. P. Waner scored Hemsley with another single to centre.

BRIDGES OF DETROIT PUZZLES WHITE SOX

Recruit Holds Losers to Four Hits as Tigers Capture Series Opener, 4 to 1.

CHICAGO, Aug. 31 (AP).—Tom Bridges, sensational Detroit rookie, held the White Sox to four scattered hits today, pitching the Tigers to a 4 to 1 victory in the series opener. YANKS AGAIN LOSE TO THE SENATORS

Hadley Yields Only 5 Hits as Washington Scores, 5-1, to Sweep 3-Game Series.

LARY SHINES FOR LOSERS

By WILLIAM E. BRANDT.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31.—The Yanks, in their last game of the season on District of Columbia soil, made five hits and one unearned run off Bump Hadley today, and Washington's 5 to 1 victory completed the Senators' clean sweep of the three-game series. It also emphasized the mastery achieved this year by Walter Johnson's men over the Yanks and pounded the last remaining shred of Yankee second-place hope to impalpable powder.

It made fifteen victories for Washington in eighteen games with the Yanks this year, and although Herb Pennock pitched strongly the 20,000 fans present only rarely expressed any trepidation as to the outcome.

About the only nervous moment the crowd had was in the eighth when Lou Gehrig fired a drive at the tall fence in right centre. When the ball started its aerial flight a tie score seemed possible the next instant, for the score stood 3 to 1 and Harry Rice was on base.

But Gehrig's drive fell short of the fence into the clutches of Centre Fielder Sam West for the third out. Then Roy Sherid took Pennock's place. A fumble by Chapman started him off wrong, and before the eighth inning ended two singles drove home two more runs.

Lyn Lary, the only Yankee who refused to be dazzled by Hadley's speed, created the eighth-inning crisis with a triple to left centre, his third hit. The bases had just been wiped clean by a double play, so Lary's three-bagger did not wreck Hadley's shut-out hopes until Jack Hayes threw wild to first base after capturing Rice's grounder. Lary scored on the error, and then came Gehrig's near-homer.

In none of the earlier innings did the Yanks offer much menace to the Senators. Pennock kept even with Hadley until the fourth. The veteran southpaw pitched himself out of a third-inning pinch crisis caused by Hadley's clever bunt, but in the fourth, successive singles by Judge, West and Spencer put over the game's first run. Singles by Manush and Cronin, Judge's infield out and West's single made the score 3—0 in the sixth.

Babe Ruth left for New York this afternoon without indicating whether or not he expected to be able to participate in the holiday double-header tomorrow.

INDIANS' 10 IN 7TH BEAT THE BROWNS

Cleveland Attack Overcomes St. Louis in Opener of the Series by 17 to 6.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 31 (AP).—One inning in which ten runs were scored was more than enough to give the Cleveland Indians a 17-to-6 victory over the St. Louis Browns in the opening game of the series today.

Thirteen men went to bat for Cleveland in the seventh inning. Hodapp and Morgan contributed home runs in that frame, besides getting another hit each.

Walter Stewart, who has won sixteen games for the Browns this year, was the losing pitcher.

MISS BEIN CAPTURES A. A. U. SWIM CROWN

Special to The New York Times.

LARCHMONT, N. Y., Aug. 31.—A surprising victory by Miss Eva Bein of the Women's Swimming Association of New York in the Metropolitan A. A. U. senior one-mile free-style championship was the feature of an all-scratch-event water carnival held by the Larchmont Shore Club over a choppy, wind-swept 55-yard course in Long Island Sound today.

The title race was marred somewhat by the fact that Miss Lisa Lindstrom, the defending champion and favorite, recent winner of the national long-distance crown, suffered a stitch in her side early in the event and was out of the running thereafter. She kept on gamely to the end, but could not approach her usual fine pace and finished a badly beaten third.

HARMSWORTH RACE CONTINUES TODAY

TWO RACERS IN MISHAPS

Phantom Overturns and Miss Britain I Has Engine Trouble in Event for 5½-Liter Craft.

DETROIT, Aug. 31 (AP).—Deprived of one of her two challenging boats, Miss Marion B. Carstairs, making her third attempt to wrest the Harmsworth Trophy from the veteran Gar Wood, faces an almost impossible task tomorrow in the second heat of the international speed boat classic.

Mishap, which has beset each of the English girl's two previous efforts to recapture for Great Britain the trophy that symbolizes the world's speed boat championship, overtook her Estelle V, driven by Bert Hawker, in the opening heat yesterday, forcing it definitely out of the race.

When Hawker accepted a tow after his fuel tanks collapsed in the first heat, Miss Carstairs was left alone with her Estelle IV as the sole hope of Great Britain in the remainder of the heat and race. She was hopelessly beaten in the first heat, but was forcing her boat at better than seventy-two miles an hour at the end.

Hawker Passed Gar Wood.

Hawker was driving Estelle V at torpedo speed downstream and seemed destined to give the veteran Gar Wood the first beating he ever had experienced in Harmsworth competition when he was forced out yesterday. From fifth place, far in the rear at the start, Hawker had actually passed Wood in Miss America IX. Suddenly flames began spouting from Estelle V's exhaust tubes and Hawker turned her quickly out of the course.

The collapse of the petrol tanks had filled the bottom of Hawker's craft with fuel. He tried vainly to make temporary repairs that would enable him to finish the heat, but finally gave up and accepted a tow, thus automatically disqualifying his boat for the remainder of the race.

That Hawker had passed Wood when he was forced out was not generally known until today, when the designer of the two British boats told how he and his mechanician, Joe Dodkin, were covered with oil when the tanks let go.

Patrol Boat Crosses Path.

Mishap also entered today into what was to have been the first heat of the international race for five-and-one-half-liter hydroplanes. The Phantom, driven by H. Luetcher Brown of Houston, Texas, turned over when a patrol boat crossed its path, and the Miss Britain I, Hubert Scott Paine's challenger, was forced out by engine trouble after making a sudden stop to offer aid to the Phantom.

The crew of the Phantom was unhurt and was taken off by a patrol craft. Declaring the heat "no contest," the regatta committee ordered it re-run tomorrow.

Luetcher Brown, driving his It, a cigar-shaped speedster, won the final heat of the event for small hydroplanes. Chris Ripp of the Bayhead (L. I.) Yacht Club finished second in his Meadow Mere II, and Al Louvet took third in Bayhead II, also of the Bayhead Y. C. M. Elliott of the Buffalo Launch Club, driving Miss Buffalo, finished fourth. Under the point system of scoring, first place for the three-heat race went to Meadow Mere, second to It, third to Bayhead II and fourth to Miss Buffalo. Brown averaged 44.375 miles per hour in today's heat.

BRITISH FOUR WINS; LINE-UP IS CHANGED

GUINNESS SENT TO BACK

By ROBERT F. KELLEY.

PORT WASHINGTON, L. I., Aug. 31.—Facing what lined up as about the hardest opposition they have faced since their arrival, the British international polo squad recorded a 15-to-6 victory today over a 26-goal Roslyn side at the Sands Point Field.

Another crowd that jammed every inch of space along the side boards attended and saw a change in the British line-up. The change came at the end of the fifth period with the score 6 to 2 in Great Britain's favor.

Captain Charles Tremayne, the team leader, sent Lieutenant Humphrey Guinness to back, while Lewis Lacey doffed the No. 4 shirt of the back and pulled on Gerald Balding's No. 2, and Gerald moved forward one position to take the place of his younger brother, Barney, who stepped down.

Formation Works Smoothly.

Riding in this formation, the British scored three goals in each of the remaining periods, adding nine to their total and finishing off play with a very presentable lead over the opposition.

But what was even more important was the fact that Guinness's arrival in the game immediately gave it far more life than it had been showing and produced, for those last three periods, a long-hitting, swinging type of play that has been most effective in this country.

Guinness was, during his time in action, a good and a hard hitting back, despite a very bad tumble soon after he started when his pony stumbled, pitched him over its head and then turned a somersault. The big officer jumped up immediately, caught and mounted his pony and continued without his play being affected visibly.

With Guinness in action, Captain C. T. I. Roark seemed much easier in his play and Lacey appeared better up forward than he had at back. Roark, for instance, had scored only once up to the time of the line-up change and he added three goals to that total in the last three periods.

Lacey, too, was apparently gaining improved results in front, and Gerald Balding was a better No. 1 than his brother had been during the first part of the game. Gerald Balding scored six goals and Roark and Lacey four each.

The British started well, scoring twice in each of the first two periods and shutting out the others through the entire first half. The defense of the old line-up was working well, but at the expense of the attack. Through the third and fourth periods the game sagged badly.

The third period, which was scoreless, was particularly sticky, with players of both sides mixing up in indiscriminate huddles, a good many fouls being called and no one able to stretch out for any sort of a run. The fifth was not much better and in it the Roslyn side outscored the British for the first time in the match. Then came the change in line-up and three fast and interesting periods.

All of the Americans, Harold E. Talbott Jr., Elmer J. Boeseke Jr., Cecil Smith and Robert E. Strawbridge Jr., played well through the afternoon.

Game Scheduled Today.

Tomorrow's polo concerns itself with another American international team's preparations, the practice test of the United States Army side which is going to Argentina.

At Mitchel Field the army is to play the strong Old Aiken side. On Tuesday at Piping Rock the Americans will play what will probably be their last test match and the British are due to see action on Wednesday at the Meadow Brook Club. These games probably will mark the close of practice for the matches, which start Saturday.

The line-up:

WILKINSON SHINES IN ARMY POLO TEST

Scores Six Goals as Blues Win From Whites, 12-3, in Series at Fort Hamilton.

Scoring in all but one period, the Blues gained a 12-to-3 triumph yesterday over the Whites in the second of a series of test matches of the United States Army polo players for the Argentine open championships next month. The game was played at the Fort Hamilton army reservation before 4,000.

The fine shooting of Captain Charles Wilkinson, star of the national junior championship team, who made six goals for the Blues, was an important factor in their victory.

Captain Don Scott and Lieutenant McDonald Jones, another member of the junior team, accounted for three goals each and their long driving several times repulsed the attacks of the Whites. Captain Peter Rodes, Lieutenant Homer Kiefer and Major C. C. Smith each scored for the Whites.

The line-up:

AIDAN ROARK AGAIN IS OPERATED UPON

HURT IN SPILL IN ENGLAND

Aidan Roark, who had been counted upon for a place on the British polo team which meets the United States on Saturday, yesterday underwent a serious mastoid operation.

He was operated upon by Dr. Hugh Blackwell and Dr. Mahlon Beach at the Eye and Ear Infirmary at 2 o'clock in the afternoon and Dr. Beach reported last night that the patient was resting easily. Mr. Roark came out of the anesthetic in fine style and although, in the words of Dr. Beach, he is still "a seriously sick man," the outlook is promising for his eventual recovery.

Roark apparently had clinched a place on the British team at the No. 1 post in the early test matches in England. But on July 25, in the fourth period of a match between Hurlingham and the Beaufort Park team in Wiltshire, England, he was tossed from his pony. He fell on his head, and cables from abroad reported that he had received a concussion.

However, when the British squad arrived in New York on Aug. 15 Roark denied having received any serious injuries and said that he felt well enough for hard, fast play. Several days later he did engage in four periods of a test match. Then it became known at the British camp that he had undergone a minor operation on Aug. 22. He was up and about a few days later but he has not been playing any polo.

This first operation upon young Roark had followed his complaint of suffering severe headaches, and an effort was made then to prevent mastoid infection.

To add to the difficulties of the British team, Captain Richard George, who had bid for the No. 1 post against Roark in England, contracted a cold and has been ailing since. This practically eliminated Captain George and left the British team leader, Captain Charles H. Tremayne, in something of a dilemma for a No. 1.

Aidan Roark is the younger brother of Captain C. T. I. (Pat) Roark, one of the English mainstays. Young Roark has played a good deal of polo in this country during the past three years in California and the East, riding to the front rank of the game.

Member of Polo Family.

Aidan Roark was born in Carlow, Ireland, and comes from a celebrated Irish polo family. His father was a poloist and his brother Pat was a member of the Army-in-India team which engaged the Americans in 1927. Three Roark brothers and the father played on a team in Ireland called the Pirates, a combination which achieved considerable of a reputation in England, meeting the Ashton brothers this Summer.

Aidan is in his early twenties and has never been a member of an international team before. He has had charge of the George G. Moore ranch in California.

GUY DECLARED VICTOR IN CAMP PERRY SHOOT

CAMP PERRY, Ohio, Aug. 31 (AP).—Deputy Sheriff J. F. Guy of Columbus, Ohio, was announced today as winner of the Thompson submachine gun match in the international small arms matches being held here. He scored a perfect 75 in the contest held yesterday.

W. F. Peach, Newport News (Va.) policeman, was second with 65; D. C. Fletcher, Washington, and G. A. Marshall, Portland, Ore., were tied for third with 60.

There were ninety-one contestants, firing ten shots each on a 100-yard range and five shots each, quick fire, from a moving vehicle.

Preliminaries to choose the twenty members of the United States team in the international rifle match for the Lord Dewar Trophy were fired today. The high scorers will be announced later. The United States team will fire next Sunday and its scores will be compared later with the marks of teams from Canada, England and Australia, firing on their home ranges.

By JOHN KIERAN.

Confidential Information Concerning Polo.

THE man in riding boots thinks that everything will be all right. Taking his listener by the arm, he led him cautiously around a corner of the barn and began:

"Don't worry. The old mug will stay here for another three years. I've looked over this British team and I figure the best it can do is finish second."

What's the matter with it?

"The British team? Well, those fellows have had a lot of bad luck. I suppose you know it's a brother act, don't you. Yes, there's the Balding boys, Barney and Gerald, and the Roarks, Pat and—no, not Mike—Aidan. C. T. I. Roark is Pat. I can't figure out how C. T. I. stands for Pat, but maybe it's an old Irish custom. Now, the Ashtons, they had an even better brother act. All four players were brothers. They just sold all their horses. Must be planning to walk back to Australia. I remember—"

What about the hard luck?

"Oh, yes. Well, Aidan Roark came down with something the surgeons are investigating, and that put him out of action. Then Captain Richard George went off his feet—probably nothing serious—but it leaves him so he can't get up a good gallop, so to speak. Then Barney Balding went into a game and in the first scrimmage a ball dashed through his helmet and laid him out cold. But he's tough. He got up and carried on. But you couldn't call all this very good luck, could you?"

The Equine Element.

Devereux Milburn says that the mounts count for about 60 per cent in a polo game. How are the British mounts?

"That's another tale of hard luck. They didn't want to overwork the mounts in England when they first got them rounded up, so they took it easy. Then it rained for a spell before they got on the boat and they couldn't work 'em at all. The boat trip kept them tied up and I guess they're still short of work. But they're good. They've got speed, though I don't think they handle as well as the American string just now. More work may even that up."

If the mounts are good, the matches should be close.

"Closer than the last ones. They've got Lacey, and he's one of the canny type; knows all there is to know about the game; very clever rider and a fine man with a mallet. Funny to see him on a British team, isn't it. He was born in Canada, lives in the Argentine and has played more polo here than in England. Pat Roark is another shrewd player. I haven't seen so much of the others, but they must be pretty good or they wouldn't be here. Still, I don't think they're quite good enough."

Bigger and Better.

Good enough for what?

The British players did rather well against Old Aiken.

"Old Aiken? Funny name for a team of youngsters, isn't it? Yes, they did pretty well against Old Aiken, but did you notice the scores that our team was rolling up in the trial matches? Regular cricket scores. The Babe Ruths are all on our side. I think we'll outweigh them maybe twenty pounds to a man. I don't know why they were worrying about a No. 2 man. Any one of the boys is good enough. The committee ought to be nice and give them all a chance to play, turn and turn about, Boeseke, Williams, Smith, Hopping and the rest. When you've got Tommy Hitchcock and Guest lined up, you don't have to worry much."

"Hard hitters! You'd think it was a golf ball when they whack it. Tommy, he's what I call a regular Rough Rider. Say, he wouldn't pull over to let the midnight freight go by. He'd ride off an African elephant. This Rube Williams from the plains of Texas is another one of those carefree catapults on horseback, but they haul him up for fouls pretty often—crossing traffic without waiting for the green light and making turns without holding out his hand, you know—things like that. If the other fellows have a good penalty shooter, that counts up against you."

Rules and Regulations.

What are the riding rules in polo?

"I never saw a book of rules, but from long observation I think the only strict rule is that you can't whip out a pistol and shoot another man's horse. Otherwise, everything seems to go unless the umpire is in a critical frame of mind. Still, I don't think a man going west has the right to crash into an opponent going due east and vice versa. There's something about not being allowed to hook a mallet from the wrong side, but I never found out which was the wrong side. The sides are all mixed up in polo, anyhow. An on-side shot is made on the off-side of the horse, for instance. That's elemental, so you can see how complicated it gets later on."

Has anybody the right of way?

"Sure. The man on the ball has the right of way—if he can hold it. But having the right of way isn't really important. It's like something you might mention to the ambulance doctor as they hauled you out of an auto wreck."

Rough and Tumble.

Rather rough game, isn't it?

"Rough? Say, football, hockey and those other games are parlor sports to polo. Talk about being tackled in football; have you ever been hit with a horse? Well, that's what they do in this game. Drive a horse right at you. And going full speed, too, which is anything from thirty to thirty-five miles an hour. It's all right to knock another rider clear out of his saddle if you do it according to Hoyle. With those horses wheeling and changing direction so suddenly, you've got to be a corking rider or you and your horse will be going in two different directions in no time."

A man might get hit with a mallet, too.

"Might get hit! That's how they christen youngsters in the polo game. It would be hard to find a polo player who hasn't been well whacked with swinging mallets. As for going down off your horse, that isn't so bad if the horse doesn't kick you or roll on you. Then it's no fun."

It must be rough on the horses, too.

"Well, maybe so," said the man in the riding boots, "but I've been around 'em for years and never heard one of them complain about it yet."

BUGLE WILL SOUND AT BELMONT TODAY

FINITE AMONG CONTENDERS

Will Face Stern Opposition From Balko, Polygamous and Others—Chase Also on Card.

By BRYAN FIELD.

The Fall Highweight Handicap features a seven-race program which will mark the return of racing to the metropolitan area this afternoon.

Belmont Park will reopen for its Fall meeting with every prospect for a successful season, as most of the crack horses which have been racing at Saratoga during August and others tested in the West have been shipped to the big plant of the Westchester Racing Association.

It is doubtful if a field of sprinters has been brought together in the East this season greater than that which will essay the Highweight issue in the six-furlong dash down the Widener chute. Fourteen have been named.

George D. Widener, although disappointed when his gray colt Jamestown was beaten in the Hopeful, should gain consolation from his good horse Finite, by The Finn.

Finite turned in a smashing performance in his last out at Saratoga, racing six furlongs in 1:11, the fastest time of the meeting. Finite's gameness several times has been questioned, but his last race showed him possessed of courage, and under 129 pounds he is taking up only nine pounds over his previous effort.

As his rivals also are heavily burdened, this additional impost should not prove a hardship. Doubtless Balko, which has been given a long rest, will be his sternest competitor. Balko on several occasions has served notice that he will play second fiddle to no sprinter, and if he is ready he is going to take a lot of beating even though he has been assigned top weight of 136 pounds.

Tetrarchal, Polygamous, Limbus, Black Majesty, Gun Royal and other fast horses are thrown in the race, which should be a great exhibition of speed.

One of the largest fields of jumpers to be seen in action is to come out for the purse in the Broadhollow Steeplechase, which is over the two-mile course. Fourteen are named and, while that number of horses would cause confusion and accidents on many a course, the chances of mishap at spacious Belmont Park should be small.

TIDAL WAVE FIRST IN LONG YACHT RACE

Special to The New York Times.

HUNTINGTON, L. I., Aug. 31.—In the closest finish on record here, with only fifteen seconds separating the first two auxiliary yachts, S. Wetherill's Tidal Wave, representing the Shelter Island Yacht Club, crossed the line first this afternoon in the sixth annual 106-mile Cornfield Light race.

Just astern was the Jijitopi, Dr. H. V. Holcomb's entry from the Huntington Yacht Club. The Tidal Wave won by crossing the finish line under power, the skipper having a sufficient reserve supply for the finish. Their times were 4:39:15 and 4:39:30.

Although twenty-one boats made the start from Lloyds Harbor at 3:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon, at a late hour tonight only the two boats mentioned had finished. Weather conditions were unfavorable for the race, there being practically a dead calm all night.

The Tidal Wave was the first boat to round Cornfield Light, on the Connecticut shore, passing around that mark at 2:15 this morning. The Adelante, sailed by Fred Geiger of the Pine Island Yacht Club, was second to round the light at 2:32 A. M., with Dr. Holcomb's Jijitopi passing it at 2:37.

The winner of the race will not be known until all have finished and the time allowance for each deducted from the elapsed time.

The race is under the auspices of the Huntington Yacht Club, with Dr. Russell W. Sammis, Hilary Corwin and Henry L. Wood constituting the race committee. Entries were auxiliary sailboats and each skipper had a supply of gasoline sufficient for half the trip, which he could use at his discretion.

51-MILE RACE WON BY CLASS R SLOOP

ANXIETY OVER LATE FINISH

Fewer Than Half of Sixty Craft Which Started Complete Race by Midnight.

Special to The New York Times.

Though the crew of this boat rejoiced in her accomplishment, many anxious moments were spent by the race committee and by members of the Seawanhaka Corinthian Yacht Club, under whose auspices the 51-mile race was held.

Fewer than half of the fleet of sixty starters having completed the course at midnight, the race committee decided to call off its constant vigil. Earlier in the evening, when dusk had finally set in, former Commodore Howard C. Smith and others tried to find the boats which had not finished. In most instances the boats apparently were becalmed.

Light Wind at Start.

When the fleet was started last night at intervals after 9:10 P. M. the breeze was light and from the south. It held until the committee had set the rockets for each division, but then began its wayward turn, shifting constantly and finally petering out so that the skippers made little progress.

Cotton Blossom's skipper won his race in a stern chase with Howard L. Curry's Gypsy. He overtook the latter after he had rounded the Stratford Shoal lighthouse more than thirty minutes astern of him.

Holding a course close to Long Island shore, Wheeler kept sailing and finished at 2:48:04, while Gypsy was timed slightly more than thirteen minutes later.

Rest Are Strung Out.

The rest of the fleet was widely strung out and J. Dahl's Little Hope, winner of the Stamford Class, was the last to be timed by the committee, at 8:56:12 P. M., almost twenty-four hours after his start.

BERMUDA YACHTS WIN SOUND SERIES

STARLING TRIUMPHS TWICE

Cardinal Is Third in 2 Races, Beating Aileen by 3 Seconds to Clinch Victory.

By LINCOLN A. WERDEN.

Special to The New York Times.

RYE, N. Y., Aug. 31.—By the slim margin of half a point the Bermuda one-design yachts scored a triumph in the series with the Long Island Sound interclubs, the first that has gone to the representatives of the islands in the Atlantic since they competed here in 1928.

Light breezes favorable to the visitors were the order of the day, but the skillful work of Eldon Trimingham, who sailed his Starling to win both morning and afternoon races, changed the entire aspect of the event, which on Friday evening saw the Americans leading by the score of 12¼ to 8¼.

Two firsts by Starling and two thirds by the Cardinal, skippered by Bayard Dill, turned the trick, for the Bermudians garnered 12½ points that gave them a grand aggregate of 20¾ to the Americans, 20¼.

Witness Stirring Finish.

Out off Scotch Caps, long after the sun had set this evening, those on the committee boat witnessed a stirring finish as Cardinal slipped ahead of Cornelius Shields's Aileen, which had been keeping her off the mark, and skimmed in to capture third place that assured the Bermudians of a victory by a matter of three seconds.

Starling had completed the race with the close reach back from Great Captains Island by 11 minutes and 17 seconds over Bozo and the American craft had sixteen seconds to spare over Cardinal.

It seemed for a while this afternoon that the boats might not finish in the stipulated four-hour allowance, so light was the breeze, and Aileen, that had kept out further from the shore, caught the southerly wind that sprang up first and rounded the first mark ahead of Bozo, with Starling third and Cardinal trailing.

Trimingham, who had his brother Kenneth and Bernard Walker as members of his crew, outfooted and outpointed the others while Cardinal, Aileen and Bozo were in a luffing match toward the close of the race for the highly valued second or third place.

Trimingham Scores Again.

This morning Trimingham added to his record of the first day when he opened the series by sailing home first, and his victory this afternoon gave him three individual first out of four.

The point score at the end of the morning was 16¼ to 14½ in favor of the Americans, and when the draw for boats was made the emerald-hulled Aileen won over Drake Sparkman's Poppy, which as a consequence did not compete in either race today.

Rotan Lost to Yale Teams; Injured in a Wrestling Bout

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Aug. 31.—Edward Rotan, one of the best all-around athletes at Yale, will be lost to the football, wrestling and track teams this season because of a serious injury received in wrestling last Spring.

He has been Yale's champion heavyweight wrestler for two years, and a year ago was runner-up heavyweight at the intercollegiates. He was one of the best guards at Yale during the last football season.

ARROW II GAINS TIE IN YACHTING SERIES

Corinthian Club Sloop Victor in Second Race of Contest for Bamberger Trophy.

Special to The New York Times.

SEASIDE PARK, N. J., Aug. 31.—Arrow II, the crack sloop from the Delaware River fleet, the entry of Bart Hirst and Joe Morris of the Corinthian Yacht Club of Philadelphia, was the victor here today in the second contest of the second annual Star class series for the Bamberger trophy.

By her victory today Arrow II tied for the lead in the series with the Hiering brothers' Flying Cloud, which finished second yesterday and third today. Nick Nack, sailed by the Luke brothers, is third on total points, with one more contest, tomorrow, to be sailed.

Tim and Tom Parkman, in Fleet Star, the Gravesend Bay entry, led at the first buoy but subsequently fell back, while on the first windward leg Arrow II showed a clean pair of heels to the rest of the fleet to establish her lead, which she held all the way.

George Elder's Iscyra II of the Manhasset Bay Yacht Club, Flying Cloud and Henry Ludeke's Curlew of the Bayhead Yacht Club extended Arrow II in the early stages of the twelve-mile course.

Meanwhile Nick Nack, starting in last place, was gradually creeping up on the leaders. In the extremely light southeasterly breeze there proved to be better wind under the shore, and Nick Nack crept up to fourth at the second round, third at the third round and runner-up to Arrow II for the remainder of the race.

Hirst and Morris in Arrow II sailed an exceptionally heady race. The protest against this craft filed yesterday was disallowed.

The Bamberger trophy, presented to the Barnegat Bay fleet of the International Star Class Yacht Racing Association last year, was first won by Elder's Iscyra II. Any of a half-dozen craft still have a chance to take the cup this year.

Miss Betty Nuthall—New National Tennis Champion.

MISS BETTY NUTHALL.

AT the top of the short flight of steps leading from the marquees to the stadium courts of the West Side Tennis Club there hangs suspended an English plaque bearing these lines from the Kipling poem which stands as the credo of British sportsmanship:

If you can meet with triumph and disaster
And treat those two impostors just the same.

A week ago yesterday as fair and representative a daughter of John Bull and his healthy attitude toward sport as has passed down those steps walked off the Forest Hills courts acclaimed as the first woman to carry the American tennis championship out of the country.

Began Net Career at 7.

No player was ever more deserving of such a tribute, for Betty Nuthall, in the short span of her nineteen years, has been treating those two impostors with the same sunny smile and unaffected good sportsmanship from a time when she was scarcely old enough to have been introduced to the stanzas of "If."

Ever since she was 7 years old this winsome, sturdily built girl from fair Albion's shore has wielded a racquet, placed there originally by her father, and from the time she was 9 she has competed in open tournaments.

Titles were hers when she had scarcely reached her teens, the English junior championship falling to her in 1924, 1925 and 1926, and in 1927, with her victory in the women's hard-court championship, came a wider fame and then laudation as she defeated Mrs. Molla Mallory, then the American titleholder, at Wimbledon.

Learned to Accept Adversity.

A trip to America as a member of the English Wightman Cup team, a victory over Miss Helen Jacobs in the international matches and a stirring battle with Mrs. Helen Wills Moody in the final of the national championship all added additional lustre to the fame of the 16-year-old girl. Then came a testimonial from René Lacoste of France to "perhaps the future champion lady player of the world."

Up to this time, 1927, Miss Nuthall had really known only one of those two impostors, but the girl with the golden ringlets was soon to make the acquaintance of the other, and it was her perseverance, her smiling acceptance of defeat without the loss of faith in herself or any of her intense ambition to improve her game during her adversity of 1928, 1929 and most of 1930, that bespoke the championship quality of her mettle more than did her sweeping success in the years before.

Beaten at every turn in 1928, when Miss Marjorie Morrill, among others, scored over her on the Riviera and turned back repeatedly in 1929, when her 8—6, 8—6 match with Mrs. Moody in the Wightman Cup play was the only redeeming feature of a season that saw her lose to Mrs. Peggy Saunders Michell in the second round at Wimbledon and to Mrs. Mallory at Forest Hills, Miss Nuthall's career seemed to be definitely on the wane.

So much ground had she lost that when the English Wightman Cup team was picked this year she gave way to Miss Joan Fry and Miss Phyllis Mudford, a newcomer, to the surprise of the tennis world, and in the English championships she was put out by Miss Elizabeth Ryan, who was winning doubles titles at Wimbledon before Miss Nuthall was heard of.

Changed Style of Service.

The outlook was dark in the extreme for the former "child wonder" of the courts, but if everyone else had lost faith in her, Miss Nuthall remained undiscouraged.

Instead of resigning herself to accepting the prevailing opinion that the future held nothing further in store for her, this blue-eyed young Diana of the courts, who had the initiative in 1928 to forsake a life-long underhand service for an overhead delivery, packed her trunks and, accompanied by her young brother, Jimmy, who is the junior champion of England, set out across the Atlantic to prove differently.

Winning the American championship without Mrs. Moody or Miss Helen Jacobs in the lists is considerably short of the feat of winning it in opposition to those two players, but this triumph of the popular young British girl stands in some ways as the most creditable performance of her brilliant, if erratic, career.

Courageous and Enterprising.

Miss Nuthall had no idea when she left England that Mrs. Moody would not defend her crown. She set out with the intent and hope of meeting the foremost woman player of the world and, considering the adversity she had undergone, that is testimonial enough to her courage and enterprise.

In defeating Miss Morrill in the semi-finals Miss Nuthall again showed her fortitude by overcoming an opponent who for a set and a half put on the closest thing to a Helen Wills exhibition of blinding speed under control that any player has given at Forest Hills in years.

To have won in the face of such a withering attack after losing the first set and trailing at 2—4 in the second speaks both for her unwavering courage and the effectiveness of her own weapons, as well as for the astuteness with which she uses them.

Speed Marks Her Game.

Speed, the distinctive attribute of the championship player of this generation, is the essence of Miss Nuthall's game. Like Mrs. Moody, she uses her racquet as a flail with which she flogs the ball with utter disdain for temporizations.

Speed alone, however, would not have beaten Miss Morrill. With her speed Miss Nuthall combines a sagacity and discernment in divining the winning avenues in the opposing court and in surveying them with strokes of corrected angles and length that make keenness of anticipation and mobility of foot a prerequisite of success for her opponent.

Immaculate in her length, resourceful and enterprising in the range in her strokes, strong of endurance and agile in her movements, Miss Nuthall is as well endowed and equipped to throw down the gauntlet to Mrs. Moody as any player on the courts and it may be that the prophecy of Lacoste may yet be borne out.

Enterprise's Designer Regards Her Boom as Most Novel Innovation of Craft.

IS SHAPED LIKE A BOAT

Special to The New York Times.

JAMESTOWN, R. I., Aug. 31.—A lifelong dream has come true for W. Starling Burgess, formerly of Boston and Marblehead, in the fact he has at last stepped into the shoes of his famous father, Edward Burgess, and designed an America's Cup defender. Resting at his Summer home here after fourteen months of supervising the construction and sailing of Harold S. Vanderbilt's Enterprise, Burgess today discussed some of the startling innovations in the design of the sloop that will meet Sir Thomas Lipton's Shamrock V in the international races off Newport.

Enterprise's "tin mast," the V-shaped main boom, two centreboards and his own years of aerodynamic study in aviation are held the most important factors in the ultimate creation of Enterprise, Burgess believes.

"This tin mast," he said, "is an interesting feature that none of the other contenders for the cup defense had. It consists of two shells of duralumin and is the first big mast of that metal ever made in the world. More than 100,000 rivets were used in its construction and it is really a work of art.

"The reason the Enterprise didn't make a better showing in the observation races was that we hadn't learned how to trim it. But once we had learned that it was just as important to trim the stays as it is to trim the sails we came up to the front. On the Enterprise we know the exact pressure on the backstays at all times, so the setting up of them is no longer a matter of guesswork.

Must Handle With Care.

"It is much lighter than a wooden stick of its height and is actually stronger than a wooden one transversely, but it is not so strong fore and aft and so we have to be very careful to keep just the right strain on it in this plane.

"Strain on the backstays and headstays is measured by means of an instrument called the shunt dynamometer, developed by engineers for use in building bridges, and is indicated very accurately in pounds pressure on a gauge. Another instrument that we employ to good advantage is the Whittemore strain gauge, which shows how much the leeward side of the mast is compressed as the force of the wind bends it over to leeward."

By far the most novel of all the innovations on the Enterprise, however, is the main boom that is going to revolutionize the rigging of all large racing sloops, Mr. Burgess believes.

"The boom of the Enterprise is quite different from the type used on any of the other boats, and nothing like it has ever been used on a big yacht before," he said. "It has ribs and keel just like a boat and is shaped like one. It is hollow in the centre, for greater lightness, and is four feet on top, with tracks running across it to allow the mainsail to take a perfect aerodynamic form or curve at all times.

Model Used in Tests.

"The preparations for the construction of the Enterprise involved laboratory tests of a model fifteen feet long and weighing 600 pounds in the United States naval towing basin at Washington, structural tests in the physical laboratory of the Bureau of Standards at Washington and tests of the sails and rigging in the wind tunnel of New York University.

"Another interesting feature of the Enterprise is that it is the smallest boat of the four which competed for the honor of defending the America's Cup. In fact, it is about as small as the rules would allow. I made it so in order that she might carry the most sail.

"My father's cup defenders always had a centreboard," he added, "but the Enterprise has two. This is a very unusual feature on any boat, and is entirely new on a cup defender. We use the large one when the boat is sailing on the wind and a small one when she is sailing off the wind.

"But please don't give me all the credit for the success of the Enterprise, because I don't deserve it. A great deal of her success in the observation and trial races is due to the skill of Harold Vanderbilt."

YACHT ENTERPRISE SEEN BY THOUSANDS

FLEET SURROUNDS MOORING

Many Small Craft Carrying Visitors Crowd About Two Racers and Lipton's Erin.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 31.—The America's Cup defender Enterprise in her silvery dress of white and Sir Thomas Lipton's challenger Shamrock V in her shiny coat of green were objects of interest to thousands of persons as the yachts lay at anchor today in Brenton Cove.

Many came in automobiles from Rhode Island and adjoining States, while other visitors, whose objective was to get a closer view, came in power boats, large and small, from the upper reaches of Narragansett Bay. Local small boats also did a thriving business in taking parties out to the yachts, and a large fleet of small craft moved about the two big sloops.

The visitors aboard boats also were interested in Sir Thomas's yacht Erin, moored near by, in the hope of getting a glimpse of the Baronet. He would have been besieged with visitors had it not been for the watchful eyes of his officers and crew.

Nearly Robbed of His Nap.

A group of movie and talkie operators laid siege to the Erin and came near robbing Sir Thomas of his nap and put an end to guests aboard for the remainder of the day.

Neither the Enterprise nor the Shamrock was taken out for a spin today. Since the cup boats have been here they have never been taken out on Sunday, as it is the desire of the owners to give the crews as much rest as possible before the cup races that are only a couple of weeks away.

Enterprise is without her full number of sails, but those that were sent to City Island to be repaired are expected back tomororw.

Radio Plans About Complete.

Plans are about complete for the broadcasting of the official America's Cup races. Tests of various vantage points for the recording of messages and rebroadcasting have been made.

Seaconnet Point, almost abreast of the starting and finish line, nine miles southeast of the Brenton Reef Lightship, has been selected as the most satisfactory.

Many of the large yachts that have been in port the past few days have left on cruises, but all are expected back by Sept. 10.

The Outlook as Summer Ends—Autumn Seasons in Other Reactionary Years.

Labor Day is a traditional landmark in the charts of finance and industry. The belief has always been maintained that, with Summer time relaxation of trade nearly at an end, the real character of the underlying situation will presently be determined. The most confident forecasts of the year given out on a New Year's Day are therefore almost invariably conditioned as applying "only until Autumn." That business activity should increase in that season, as compared with midsummer months, has commonly been taken for granted, but the question of doubt always remained whether the expansion would be of normal magnitude, or only hesitant and feeble, indicating more than the usual downward reaction when the Autumn trade had terminated.

Three recent years have produced a distinctly disappointing Autumn season. The Reserve Board's index of industrial production, adjusted to the normal performance of the seasons, was lower in October than in August during 1929, 1927 and 1923. In all of them there was actual increase in Autumn railway traffic as compared with midsummer and in sales of merchandise, but the increase was not in the ratio that merchants usually expect. In 1921, a year which in many respects was similar to 1930 up to the end of August, freight-loadings in October exceeded those of the Summer month by 350,000 cars, or nearly 10 per cent, and steel production, which in July had been only 35 per cent of the pre-war monthly average and in August 49 per cent, had risen to 70 in October. The Reserve Board statisticians reported building and textile industries "very active" in the Autumn with production of mines and factories "moderately increased" and actual consumption of wool, lumber and cotton materially enlarged.

Nevertheless, the Autumn's trade results as a whole were recognized as unfavorable, and there was little sign of revival from depression when the new year began. The real meaning of the coming season's trade will be judged in the light of these precedents, but even so, its character will not have indicated convincingly the subsequent course of trade and industry. There has been wide variation in the sequel to other disappointing Autumns. The Autumn of 1927 was almost immediately followed by discovery that actual requirements of consumers had been greatly underestimated; trade and production increased rapidly in response to urgent orders during the very time of the year when business is usually slack—the first three months of 1928. The unsatisfactory business of the Autumn of 1923 lasted throughout the first half of 1924; the Spring trade of that year, instead of bringing business revival, carried activity lower still, almost to that of the later deflation period. On the other hand, although little recovery came in immediate sequence to the Autumn of 1921, there was distinct although cautious revival in the ensuing Spring, with consumers' demands and trade activities steadily expanding thereafter.

When the reactionary period in trade terminated at the end of 1927, it had lasted seven months. When it ceased in 1924, its term of continuance had been almost exactly a year. The signs of tangible recovery in 1922 came when business reaction had been virtually unbroken during a two-year period. If an actual turn for the better were to come this Autumn, the trade reaction which began in 1929 would have lasted a year and a half; if genuine recovery were to be postponed until next Spring, it would have had precisely the same duration as the "deflation crisis."

The analogy is interesting and significant. Neither in the shrinkage of business activities, nor in scope of decline in staple prices, nor in entanglement of credit, has the reaction in 1930 approached the severity which marked that of 1921. The depression of 1921, like this year's, was world-wide; it embodied forced readjustment not only from the previous year's extravagances but from the huge inflation of the war. Prospect of early recovery may reasonably have been considered then as very remote, but we know how soon it came. No doubt it was helped in 1922 by recovery in staple prices, yet that itself was effect as well as cause of trade revival. A good part of the fall in prices—how much it remains for the future to determine—has this year, as in 1921, been a consequence of continuing trade reaction which was bound eventually to spend its force.

SUDDEN RECOVERY IN LONDON'S MARKET

MANY POLITICAL RUMORS

Changes in Government Policy Reported, but Talk Is Also General of "Oversold" Market.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 29.—The week's outstanding incident in financial London was the remarkable change in the stock market, which, emerging from its previous state of acute depression, has assumed an aspect of buoyancy which completely reversed the picture. Rumor and fact divided responsibility for this change of form. Rumor fixed on the possibility of action by the government on new and sounder lines for dealing with unemployment and with the fiscal problems. In addition, another attempt at debt conversion was suggested as being imminent.

As a prelude to the change in fiscal policy, it was freely rumored that the Chancellor of the Exchequer would resign because of his known and unchangeable attitude against imposition of the general tax on imported manufactured goods which the government is reported to be contemplating. These rumors have subsequently been more or less officially denied, but sentiment on the markets has remained cheerful and technical conditions have visibly improved.

Earlier this week the heavy liquidation which had appeared to come from one or two definite sources ceased abruptly. The turning off of the tap was so sudden as to suggest that important interests had stepped in with advice and assistance in order to keep the markets intact. The effect was to drive the bears to cover, and this action on the part of the short interest showed the markets to be in a sold out condition and technically ripe for upward reaction.

The rally has naturally been most pronounced in those securities which have had to bear the brunt of forced liquidation. While it is impossible to say whether the present recovery means the actual turning point after months of depression, it is at any rate generally felt that security values have in many instances fallen considerably below their intrinsic worth. At the moment activity is almost entirely professional, but the public is becoming an interested spectator. It might be induced by the low level of prices to take a more active interest, but only in case the trade revival for which every one is waiting were to show signs of developing in the Autumn, or in case opinion that the markets have touched bottom were to become more or less general.

LONDON SEES NO SIGN OF QUICK RECOVERY

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 29.—This week's revival on the stock exchanges here was believed to have affected in some degree the commodity markets, on which a rather better tendency was noticeable in several quarters. Fundamental conditions, however, remain unchanged and no decided recovery is yet anticipated.

When such recovery comes it is believed that it will have to depend on general trade conditions, and thus far there have been no signs of revival in business, either here or abroad. It should be emphasized, however, that the present low prices are regarded principally as effect of the depression in trade, not as the cause, although very general overproduction has also been an influence.

Views of this market regarding the prospect for American stocks and trade in the near future continue unfavorable. This market sees no reason to expect that company reports for the third quarter in the United States will show any improvement, and the unemployment problem seems likely to continue troublesome. The general judgment is that financial activity is just now so low in America as to yield scanty profits, and that at the same time the condition of general trade and losses caused to agriculture by the drought are factors which must reduce buying power and tend to postpone business revival.

UNCERTAIN OF FUTURE IN EUROPE'S MARKETS

May Depend on Commodity Prices—Movements as Yet Are Very Irregular.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Aug. 29.—Forecasts of future movement, on the Bourse and in other markets, are very reserved. The weakness in raw materials and agricultural products does not tend to restore confidence. The present feeling is that recovery in commodity prices will not be immediate but will proceed slowly, though financial Paris considers that in most cases the bottom has already been touched.

This week the Bourse recovered sharply and, while shares in the petroleum and other industries were irregular, improvement has been general. One of the principal causes for the firmness here was the better showing of prices in Wall Street early in the week. Sales for foreign account have occurred, notably Dutch, but they were easily absorbed. French banks bought and bears had to cover hurriedly, these repurchases adding a stimulus to the market.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Aug. 29.—Tendencies on the Boerse continued undecided this week. The rise of the preceding fortnight was checked by weakness on the continental Stock Exchanges, but there was a temporary advance in the middle of the week, in which electrical shares chiefly benefited.

During the week there was considerable Dutch selling of rayon shares, and Aku touched on Thursday the new low point of 78. The Frankfurter Zeitung's index of Stock Exchange prices as of Aug. 22 was 95.55, against 94.28 on Aug. 15, when the first recovery occurred since the middle of May.

BERLIN, Aug. 29.—The classified return of Germany's foreign trade with the different countries during the first half of the year shows that the world-wide fall in prices for food and raw material has tended to check Germany's export of manufactured goods. Such exports to Argentina, Brazil and the United States have declined very sharply, and that is attributed to decreased purchasing power of countries whose export of food and raw materials is a specialty.

Exports to countries in Europe, on the other hand, continue to increase. During the six months Europe took 76.6 per cent of all German exports, as against 72.3 per cent in the corresponding half of 1929. The special point is made that Germany's export of manufactured wares to all countries declined in the half year only 2.3 per cent, whereas British exports in the corresponding period decreased 15.9.

PARIS STILL DRAWS ON FOREIGN CREDITS

CUTTING LONDON BALANCES

But Gold Withdrawals From the Bank of England Have Come to an End.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Aug. 29.—Despite the approach of the month end, the Paris money market has remained extremely easy this week and requirements of the banks were covered without difficulty. In view of this plethora of money, financial circles do not believe that the rise in franc exchange in relation to sterling and dollars which occurred this week was a consequence of funds being brought home by banks with a view to end-of-the-month requirements.

During the past year, repatriation of funds for that purpose often took place before the month-end due date, private banks preferring to reinforce their holdings of francs by selling sterling and dollar exchange rather than by rediscounting more trade bills with the Bank of France. This month, however, nothing of the kind has happened. Bills discounted by the bank during the past few days have been very moderate in amount and day-to-day money has fallen to 1¾ per cent, compared with 2 per cent last week. This proved that funds were sufficiently plentiful on the market to permit private banks to fill their month-end requirements without bringing money from abroad.

Funds have undoubtedly been repatriated in the last few days, but for a different reason. Such drafts on the foreign markets reflected, not any special need of capital at Paris but the very great ease on the London market, where interest rates are just now lower than at Paris. Furthermore, since the risk of loss from investment in exchange is fairly great, with sterling about 10 centimes above the import point for British gold, the French private banks hesitate to keep large balances at London. Probably, also, the firmness in franc exchange has been accentuated through sales of sterling for account of foreign tourists.

This was why part of the South African gold arriving last Tuesday in London was taken by France, although the Swiss market also competed, Swiss francs being also at a premium in sterling. Nevertheless, the price of sterling is still too high to render profitable purchase from the Bank of England of gold 916 fine, with a view of refining it for resale to the Bank of France. During three weeks there has been no withdrawal of gold on French account from the Bank of England.

German Taxes Below Estimate.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Aug. 29.—The receipts from Federal tax collections during the first four months of the German fiscal year are reported as 3,219 million marks. This is 200 million less than the proportionate share for the period of the 10,266 million estimated for the full financial year.

Believed That Revival in Manufactures Will Come First—Bankers See Export of German Capital.

BERLIN, Aug. 29.—Although German production of materials and instruments of production continues to decline, the pace of the decline in output of manufacturing industries themselves is visibly slackening, and in certain branches, particularly footwear, porcelain, woolen and silk goods, there has already been a recovery. The Institute for Studying Trade Fluctuations takes the ground that, since depression in the manufacturing branches began much earlier than that in raw materials, manufactures will recover sooner. It considers this is all the more probable since stocks on hand are being rapidly cleared out.

The price situation continues to be watched with paramount interest. The index of wholesale prices as of Aug. 20, at 125, was unchanged from the previous week, but the index for the group of raw and half-manufactured materials continued to decline. It is now 117.5, as against an average of 131.9 last year.

This movement of prices is regarded from different viewpoints. Hans Raumer, former Minister of Industry, estimates that the decline in the raw material prices has caused a saving of 1½ billion marks per year to German industry. Just now the prevailing view is that the decline in raw material prices will not continue all Autumn, since demands for manufactured goods may increase any day.

Much interest was taken this week in the balance sheets of German commercial banks for the end of July, which showed decline in deposits during that month amounting to 230 millions. This change, however, is entirely due to decrease in home deposits on call. The longer-term deposits, which consist largely of foreign funds, showed substantial increase. Bankers attribute the fall in home deposits to the nervousness which has prevailed since dissolution of the Reichstag. Large shipments of capital are thought to have been transferred recently to Switzerland, and the Frankfurter Zeitung estimates the total export German capital since stabilization of the mark at five to five and a half billion marks.

EXCHANGE AGAINST LONDON

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 29.—The position of sterling in the foreign markets is just now far from favorable. Sterling in France and Switzerland has fallen to a level making profitable gold purchased in London and the whole of this week's £800,000 gold arriving from South Africa was reexported to these two countries.

Yet at the same time the Bank of England's position is very satisfactory, and the bank can afford to look with something like complacency on the diversion of the South African gold to the continent. Furthermore, as regards the actual outlook for sterling, there is reason to believe that, with trade throughout the world abnormally depressed and commodity values at abnormally low levels, pressure on the sterling market during the coming months will be considerably less than usual.

STOCK MARKET IN AUGUST.

London Prices Down Heavily for Month; Lowest Since 1926.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 29.—The Bankers Magazine's index number of prices of representative British securities as of Aug. 19 was 118.1. This compares with 120.3 a month before and with 127 a year ago. It is the lowest since December, 1926.

Home railway ordinary stocks declined during the month by about 16½ per cent and industrial securities fell nearly 7 per cent. The Financial News index for thirty industrial shares as of Aug. 27 is 75.6, against 72.9 the previous week, 76.7 at the beginning of the month and 104.7 at the end of August, 1929.

NOT ASCRIBING FALL IN PRICES TO GOLD

SMALL RESERVE REQUIRED

International Gold Movements Expected to Slacken in Autumn, but Outlook Otherwise Is Obscure.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 29.—Here, as elsewhere, controversy over the influence of gold supplies on the fall in prices has continued. Opinion in the practical banking world generally holds that both overproduction and developments in the gold market have exerted influence, but even the economists are refusing now to attach too much importance to gold supplies as a governing cause. The belief prevails that the influence of gold supplies on facilities for credit mainly affects the operations of a central bank and has little effect on the policy of private banks. These, somewhat contrary to the general theory, possess ample means of enlarging their credit facilities when needed, a process limited under present arrangements only by a relatively much lower ratio of cash reserves.

Not many confident expectations are expressed, however, regarding the Autumn situation. The view of this market is that gold movements in the coming season should be smaller because of the world-wide trade depression. It is believed that the demands on London's gold for foreign account have virtually been completed, and that the Bank of England's gold reserve is likely to be strengthened during the coming weeks.

There has even been some expectation of a reduced Bank of England rate, but the London bank is now supposed, owing to prospective Autumn demands on it, to be opposing too great ease of money by limiting artificially the resources of the open market. In continental Europe, a renewed movement of capital out of Germany into Holland, Switzerland and France is expected for the Autumn. Political disturbances in Germany are assigned as one probable cause; the controversy over the burden of fulfilling obligations under the Young plan is another.

It is not felt here that German reparations payments can be greatly affected adversely by the lower scale of prices, seeing that reparations payments are made, not from Germany's own production surplus but from proceeds of foreign loans. As for America, present expectation is that Autumn trade in that country should revive, and the slightly higher rate of American steel production in the last two weeks has had a favorable influence.

GOLD AT BANK OF FRANCE.

PARIS, Aug. 29.—The reserve ratio of the Bank of France has risen to a new record figure of 52.51 per cent, which is 17.51 per cent above the legal minimum of 35 per cent. The bank return of Aug. 22 showed further increase in gold holdings from 46,952,000,000 francs to 47,195,000,000. They were 44,169,000,000 seven weeks ago. This week's increase was due to the arrival of gold bought a week before in New York.

Between Aug. 14 and Aug. 22, however, no gold purchases for French account were made abroad. Dollar exchange depreciated slightly compared with francs, but prices remain above the gold import point. Early this week several Paris banks made preparations to import gold from New York, but exchange rates did not permit the operation.

Bank of England's Gold.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 30.—The Bank of England took in £414,084 gold during the present calendar week. Withdrawals were only £591,122. Next Tuesday £1,169,000 in bar gold is due to arrive in the bullion market from South Africa. It is expected that the bulk of this will be re-exported to France and Switzerland.

NO CHANGE EXPECTED IN LONDON BANK RATE

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 29.—The present week's fresh decline in open market discount rates has left the bank rate high and dry, the difference between the market rate for three months' bills and the bank rate being now nearly 1 per cent. It was thought for a time that this condition would induce the Bank of England to lower its rate last Thursday, but well-informed opinion all along has been that no such action was to be expected, unless in case of international agreement to reduce bank rates still further.

Idle trade has resulted in piling up funds which are available for short time investment. This money is constantly seeking employment in sterling bills, the supply of which remains much below demand, and that seems to be the main reason for the weakness in discount rates. It is considered scarcely to afford good ground for lowering the bank rate so near to Autumn. But while a lower bank rate is improbable, there is believed to be no reason to anticipate a higher rate for some time to come.

GERMANY'S UNEMPLOYMENT

Now Worst in Non-Manufacturing Trades, but Serious Elsewhere.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Aug. 29.—The unemployment figures indicate that at present the most depressed manufacturing industries in Germany are in the classifications of wool, clothing, saddlery and glass. Unemployment in the textile branch is heavy, but it shows hardly any increase since last Spring.

The worst showing of unemployment is in the non-manufacturing branches, notably building and affiliated trades. The steel industry does not show up much better, but sentiment in that branch is more hopeful, owing to the advance of scrap iron prices.

French Strike Not Unwe[illegible]; Stocks of Unsold Goods Heavy

PARIS, Aug. 29.—Contrary to last week's expectations, the strike of textile workers in the Roubaix and other northern districts is still continuing. The impression in financial circles here is that employers, while showing the utmost spirit of conciliation, cannot yield to the demands of the workingmen in view of the extent to which the northern textile industry has suffered from the economic crisis.

The companies had important stocks of wool and cotton which have considerably depreciated during the last twelve months. The losses are heavy and the outlet for the goods is still decreasing; therefore it is not improbable that the employers view the possibility of a prolonged stoppage without regret.

GERMAN TRADE FEELS ELECTION SKEPTICISM

Apprehension Over Fascist or Red Gains Casts Shadow as Leipzig Fair Opens.

LEIPZIG, Germany, Aug. 31 (AP).—The coming general elections in Germany cast a bit of shadow over the centuries-old Leipzig Trade Fair, which opened today.

There was some apprehension in certain quarters that any strengthening of the radical elements in the new Reichstag, Fascist or Communist, might bring in its train doubtful economic experiments.

On the other hand, there were signs of revival of several branches of trade, creating a distinct air of cheerfulness which even the political situation failed to dissipate.

Raimund Koehler, president of the fair's organizing body, in the opening address declared that Germany's economic position is intrinsically sound. He said that with confidence rising abroad in Germany's productive capacity foreign capital would increasingly be attracted by higher returns offered here than elsewhere, and that domestic capital placed by "timorous investors" abroad would find its way back to the domestic market.

Although the United States has placed a high tariff on toys, exhibitors said that German products of this nature will continue to compete successfully with American toys.

Business men from seventy-two countries are attending the fair, the United States being represented by about 900 buyers. Some 8,500 exhibits are on display in fifty-seven buildings in the heart of the city.

The exhibits include about 100 American products, and German buyers are said to be keenly interested in many of them, indicating that substantial orders may be placed.

DAY LOANS AT BERLIN DOWN TO 1½ PER CENT

Month-End Requirements Have Little Effect—Small Demand Expected in Autumn.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Aug. 29.—Up to the middle of this week, the ease in money at Berlin increased further, supplies far exceeding demands and day loans being available at rates materially below the market's nominal quotations. At times they went to 1½ per cent. In the middle of the week, by way or preparation for the month-end settlements, demand increased, and on Thursday day loans were quoted at 3½@5½ per cent.

Business, however, continued to be done at the previous lower rate. Monthly loans on Thursday were 4½@5½ per cent, but little business was done since Stock Exchange firms preferred to borrow on the day to day basis the funds required for meeting month-end liabilities.

There are renewed offers of foreign funds, mostly for three months, but bankers are disinclined to accept the offers, being convinced that Autumn requirements for credit will be below the normal.

REICHSBANK BORROWINGS.

Believed Shrinkage in Loans Now Nearly Over.

BERLIN, Aug. 29.—The Reichsbank's return for the third week of August indicates that seekers for credit are once more turning to the Reichsbank. It is true, the weekly statement showed decline in discounts of 71 million marks, but that decline was mainly due to renewal of bills in foreign currencies from the discount department and the rebooking of them as legal cover for circulation. The total of discounts in reichsmarks declined very little.

Bankers are inclined to think that the decrease in Reichsbank discounts, which are now 700 millions lower than a year ago, has about come to an end. Since, however, the legal cover stands at the high record point of 73.5 per cent of outstanding circulation, even a normal Autumn increase in credits could not lead to an advance in discount rates.

INCREASE IN EXPORT OF ARGENTINE GRAIN

CUSTOMS RECEIPTS DOWN

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BUENOS AIRES, Aug. 31.—Argentina's grain stocks moved somewhat better during August than during July, wheat exports averaging 842,450 bushels weekly, compared with 764,700 in July; corn averaging 5,900,500 bushels weekly, compared with 4,943,500 bushels weekly in July; oats, 553,000 bushels weekly, compared with 345,000. Exports for the year to date, however, are still far behind the same date last year, wheat totaling 67,183,000 bushels, compared with 186,031,000 on the same date last year; corn, 100,823,000 compared with 125,207,000; oats, 1,788,000, compared with 2,472,000.

Flaxseed continues to move sluggishly, averaging 630,000 bushels weekly in August, the same as in July. Exports to date total 34,936,700 bushels, compared with 45,301,400 on the corresponding date last year.

It is estimated that Argentina still has on hand an exportable surplus of 45,837,000 bushels of wheat, 195,963,000 bushels of corn and 13,935,000 bushels of flaxseed.

The wool season will close on Sept. 30. There is little interest in stocks still on hand, as they are small and of poor selection. Shipments this week totaled 2,446 bales, bringing the total to date to 313,332 bales, compared with 333,963 bales on the same date last year. The United States has taken 32,955 bales this year, compared with 37,589 last year.

The exchange market, which has been steady and quiet for some time, dropped sensationally on Thursday, when dollar quotations rose from 121 gold pesos and 70 cents per hundred dollars to 124, because of exaggerated reports of the political situation cabled abroad. Par is 103.50.

Buenos Aires customs receipts to the end of August totaled 195,848,339 pesos, which is a decrease of 44,540,661 pesos from the same date last year, a decrease of 18.5 per cent.

Charters were arranged during the week for only four steamers, totaling 26,200 tons, compared with fifteen steamers last week, totaling 103,400 tons. This week's charters were all for San Lorenzo grain loadings at rates varying from 18 to 19 shillings to the United Kingdom or the Continent.

CHECKS MINNESOTA DEAL.

Power Board to Make Inquiry as to "Investment" in Winton Project.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31 (AP).—The Federal Power Commission has notified the Minnesota Power and Light Company of its intention to fix and determine the "actual legitimate investment" made by the company in purchasing the Winton project, a hydro-electric development of the Kawishiw River, Minnesota.

A commission examiner said the company's records failed to support ledger entries showing investment costs.

A preliminary report prepared by Samuel Meisels, the examiner, said the Minnesota Power and Light Company was controlled by the American Power and Light Company, and both were controlled by the Electric Bond and Share Company. He said the "cost of the Winton project to the licensee includes an unknown portion of a $20,000,000 write-up."

He added he realized the futility of attempting to establish actual costs after he "encountered a lack of records to support ledger entries."

FUND SHIFTING CUT BY KREUGER & TOLL

$46,500,000 Payment to Germany Last Week Was Entirely a Bookkeeping Operation.

As far as the money market is concerned, the payment of $46,500,000 by the Swedish match interests to the German Government on Saturday was merely a matter of bookkeeping, brokers here said yesterday. The payment, which represented the initial instalment of the loan of $125,000,000 to the German Government in consideration of a fifty-year match monopoly, is merely turned over to the international banking group, headed by Lee, Higginson & Co., which advanced the entire loan to the German Government in March.

The German Government did not actually receive the full $125,000,000, but only 93 per cent of it, or $116,250,000, since under the terms of the loan and the match monopoly, Kreuger & Toll, the holding company for the Swedish match interests, agreed to accept $125,000,000 principal amount of 6 per cent German Government bonds at 93 per cent of par. After ten years the German Government has the option of repaying the loan at par, but the match monopoly continues for the full fifty years. The remaining payment of $69,750,000 will be made to Germany on May 29, 1931.

Kreuger & Toll, it is said, have not found difficulty in raising the $46,500,000 required for the initial payment to Germany. On June 30 the French Government elected to pay off its issue of $75,000,000 5 per cent bonds held by Kreuger & Toll at a price of 103½. Since the match interests bought the bonds at 93½, the profit on the transaction amounted to $7,500,000. Of the $75,000,000 issue $50,000,000 was held by the International Match Corporation, the American subsidiary of Kreuger & Toll, thus permitting further bookkeeping on this side of the water instead of actual transfer of funds. As far as the German loan is concerned, the International Match has agreed to take $30,000,000 of this issue.

STEEL OUTPUT RISES AS PRICES WEAKEN

GAIN SEEN IN INITIAL STAGE

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURGH, Aug. 31.—Steel production is reported to have increased, but the reports differ and they do not tell where and how the increases occurred. One estimate puts the increase at 3½ points, or 6½ per cent, in one week, while another gives it as 2 points, or 4 per cent, in two weeks. Since production decreased almost continuously from February until the middle of August, an upturn has been expected, for steel has a habit of moving in swings rather than fluctuating from month to month. Moreover, an autumnal upturn is the usual thing, and according to precedents a gain is overdue by two to four weeks.

Within the steel trade the prediction has been that a distinctly better movement would become visible by the middle of September, and the view now is that the rise in operations is in its initial stages. The trade has been indisposed, however, to look for any early gain by the route of general business improvement. Thus unless the increase in steel tonnage is very sharp, it will not be taken as an indication that trade at large has begun to improve.

Men outside the ranks of steel producers or sellers are asking whence a substantial improvement in steel demand can come. They run over the familiar list of consuming classes and ask which one can do better. Hints have appeared that the railroads are likely to economize somewhat in the buying of rails. The automobile industry is at the beginning of the season that usually shows decreased production.

Fabricated structural steel work has been so active that improvement there is not expected. The farm implement industry usually increases its activity at this time of year, but it does not consume a great deal of fields in which buyers may have been at capacity for three months and presumably will slow down late in the year.

These activities, however, involve scarcely one-half of the normal consumption of steel. The other half may easily account for fluctuations in steel demand that can be seen in mill operating rates but cannot be traced to sources. No little of this consumption is miscellaneous and in fields in which buyers way have been very conservative and may easily increase their purchases.

No finishing branch of the steel industry shows any impressive improvement. Bars are dull; structural shapes have been fairly active right along; plates are active as material for line pipe manufacture and rather dull otherwise; sheets have barely been holding their own for two months; tin plate always has a decrease at this time of year; strip and wire mills have both been running at low rates. As to pipe and tube mills, no generalization is possible, as they are fully engaged as to line pipe and poorly engaged as to other material.

Some further price weaknesses have developed in the last week, but there has been no individual change of importance. It is not unprecedented for steel prices to slip when mills are running fairly well and to hold when they are running somewhat poorly. It is largely a matter of the attitude of the sellers, individual or collective.

SMALL LOSS SHOWN BY STOCKS IN MONTH

RALLY FOLLOWS DECLINE

Price movements of stocks listed on the New York Stock Exchange were highly irregular in August, sliding off in the first half of the month and recovering in the closing weeks, with the result that the net change in points was small. Values of 240 issues comprising twenty groups showed a decrease of $60,803,242 for August, the smallest change for that length of time since the end of 1928.

In July the same number of issues showed an appreciation of $1,429,659,474, and in August, 1929, a gain of $4,465,381,600. This was the peak of the advance last year, just before the collapse of the market.

Trading was dull throghout most of August, with the volume about equally divided between the downward trend that prevailed up to Aug. 12 and the irregular rally that set in at that time and lasted until the close of the month. Professional traders dominated the market, a bearish element being active in the early trading. The absence of the public was shown by successive reductions in brokers' loans in the last two weeks while the market was advancing. Support appeared at the middle of the month at levels approximating those of July 7, when it seemed that the selling would push prices below the June levels.

Factors Affecting Prices.

Unfavorable news was prevalent, but had less effect on prices in the last half of the month. Weakness in the coppers was due to further cuts in the price of the metal and additional reductions of dividends by several producers. Another unexpected occurrence was the serious effect of the drought on the agricultural sections of the country. Passing of its dividend by the Warner Brothers Pictures Corporation also unsettled the market. Offsetting these bearish factors were continued ease of money, a rising bond market, better prices for scrap steel and increased steel operations in the latter part of the month.

There were no spectacular group advances, but two soft spots were oils and coppers. Kennecott lost 6 points and Anaconda 5 points in the month. Houston Oil dropped 8⅛ points. Some rather large gains were made, including Loew's, up 6¾ points; Johns-Manville, 11 points; R. H. Macy, 10; Sears, Roebuck, 7⅜; Texas & Pacific, 15, and American Tobacco, 11 points. There were losses of 14⅛ points in Vanadium, 7⅝ points in Goodyear and 7⅛ points in Warner Brothers Pictures.

Changes in prices since the end of September, 1929, show heavy declines in October and November last, when the total loss was more than $15,000,000,000. This period was followed by four months of rising prices, and at the end of March approximately one-third of the losses established in the collapse was recovered. Losses from the end of March to the end of June this year, however, wiped out whatever recovery there was, and, considering the changes in July and August, prices now are about where they were at the end of last December.

Chile to Build Tourist Hotels.

A special campaign to induce tourists to go to Chile is to be pushed by the Chilean Government. Among the projects is a bill authorizing the construction of tourist hotels in the south-central portion of the country. This section of Chile is known as the Chilean Switzerland because of its mountains and beautiful scenery. Much of the money which the government intends to appropriate for tourist hotels will be spent around Lake Todos los Santos in the province of Llanquihue, about 200 miles south of Concepcion, and at Villarica in the province of Valdavia, about 100 miles further north.

CHANGES IN MARKET VALUATIONS OF STOCKS

CORN YIELD IS SEEN LOWEST SINCE 1901

PRICES GO UP FOR WEEK

CHICAGO, Aug. 31.—A corn crop average of 2,000,000,000 bushels or less is expected to be presented to the trade on Tuesday morning by private statisticians in their monthly estimates. They will show indications of the smallest crop since 1901, when 1,523,000,000 bushels were raised. The average of last month's estimates was 2,469,000,000 bushels, while the government's August returns were 2,212,000,000, compared with 2,614,000,000 harvested last year. The five-year average is 2,700,000,000 bushels.

The condition of the corn crop is so irregular that it is freely conceded by all experts who have been over the corn belt that, due to so many barren stalks and nubbins, husking returns will be necessary to determine the aggregate yield. Samples of corn from some of the best sections show the effects of the extreme heat and drought, kernals being short and shriveled and cobs small.

An increase of 5,000,000 bushels, or a little more, is expected in the Spring wheat estimates, which would bring the crop up to around 230,000,000 bushels, compared with 228,000,000 produced last year.

September frequently marks a turning point in the grain trade. With the smallest corn crop in almost thirty years and a belief that ultimate returns will bring the yields below the present estimates, the undertone is bullish for the markets in all coarse grains despite the recent advance of 30 to 33 cents in corn and a sharp upturn in oats, rye and barley.

Argentine corn is said to be offered, duty paid, to New York, at around 94 cents a bushel, and indications are that it is being brought from Montreal to Chicago. The freight from that port is 8 cents a bushel by water. Argentine corn, however, is so different from American, being hard and flinty, that it requires grinding to bring satisfactory feeding results. Industries, however, have used it in the past with good results.

In wheat the trade is inclined to be cautious on the short side because of the strength in corn and other coarse grains. Despite increasing supplies, with the visible the greatest known at this season, the feeling is that wheat should do better. At the same time it is believed also that it would be best for the interests of wheat holders in the United States and Canada to keep prices at a world's parity, so that 150,000,000 bushels or more can be disposed of between now and Jan. 1. If this is not accomplished, the belief is expressed that nothing but a calamity in the Southern Hemisphere and a greatly increased buying by importing Europe can advance prices materially and offset the bearish factors.

Export clearances of wheat of late have been materially larger, reaching more than 10,000,000 bushels last week, compared with 5,000,000 in the week last year. Clearances so far this season have been 76,000,000 bushels, against about 59,000,000 in the corresponding period last year, an increase of 17,000,000 bushels.

September holdings were heavily liquidated at the close of the week, with changing from that month to December at 5 to 5¾ cents. Hedging pressure from the Northwest has fallen off, and the movement of Spring wheat in that section is reported as having reached its peak.

Wheat men, in commenting on reports from Winnipeg regarding the pools' actions, can see nothing beneficial for the Canadian farmer in accepting 60 cents for No. 1 Northern at Fort William as an initial payment, as it means anywhere from virtually nothing to 40 cents a bushel for his grain. They figure that the farmer would do better to sell his grain to non-pool interests and get his money all at once.

In the round-up of last week's business wheat ended 3⅜ to 4⅛ cents lower, oats ⅝ to 1⅛ cents off and rye 2⅜ to 2⅝ cents down, while corn finished around the highest of the season, with net gains of ½ to 1½ cents. September corn closed at 99⅜ to 99½ cents, about one of the highest closes of the season. The top for the week was 99⅞ cents.

December reached 96⅛, or within 3⅜ cents of the season's high, and was 94⅞ to 95 cents at the close. March closed at 97 to 97¼ cents, and May, after touching $1, finished at 98¾ to 98⅞ cents.

Primary receipts of corn since Nov. 1, 1929, aggregated 224,000,000 bushels, against 251,000,000 in the same time in the previous season. Last week they were 4,797,000 bushels, in the previous week 5,958,000 and in the week last year 5,416,000. Shipments, respectively, were 2,734,000, 3,349,000 and 2,330,000 bushels.

Wheat futures finished the week with September at 85⅜ to 85¼ cents, December 91¼ to 91, March 95⅜ and May 98⅜ to 98½.

Primary receipts since July 1 aggregated 185,000,000 bushels, or 10,000,000 under those in the same time last year. All markets, except St. Louis, handled less wheat than last year. Last week they were 13,039,000 bushels, in the previous week 17,565,000 and in the week last year 14,570,000. Shipments, respectively, were 6,984,000, 10,187,000 and 12,602'000 bushels.

BRITISH WHEAT TRADE DOUBTS HIGHER PRICE

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 30.—This week's renewed decline in wheat prices, almost to the season's lowest, is regarded here as not out of line with the actual position and outlook of the grain trade. It is admitted that European countries are likely to require more foreign wheat this season, owing to their own smaller crops. But the North American wheat crop promises to be so large, and the aggregate world carry-over is so great, that it is felt that North America alone could meet the import requirements of consuming countries in the coming year.

At the same time, there are expected to be substantial supplies from Australia and Argentina. Thus a world carry-over at least as large as that which now exists is generally predicted for next July. In the face of this situation grain market experts do not look for any notable improvement in world wheat prices during the cereal year which has just begun. Many of them consider a further decline as at least possible in the immediate future.

LOW COTTON PRICES BRING MILL BUYING

SPOTS HARDEN IN INTERIOR

Active Trading at New Orleans Followed by Reaction Due to Pre-Holiday Liquidation.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ORLEANS, La., Aug. 31.—The cotton market was fairly active last week, and at times trading was brisk, although there was the usual slowing down at the week-end in advance of the triple holiday in connection with Labor Day.

In the early days of the week prices advanced practically $3 a bale from the closing levels of the previous Friday, owing to active covering by shorts. There was also a falling off in hedge selling, which permitted such trade buying and price fixing by mills as developed to have a stimulating effect. It was considered probable also that the advance was helped by the hardening of the spot basis in the interior, due to the evident purpose of producers not to sell freely at present prices. This they are enabled to do by the policy adopted by the Farm Loan Board acting through the cooperatives to lend on cotton up to 90 per cent of its market value.

Another influence for covering was moderate rainfall in the central and some western portions of the cotton belt. The falling off in hedge selling was attributed to the holding back by the farmers, and the fact that much of the cotton that is being marketed is of comparatively low grade, and therefore it is not profitable to hedge it.

Liquidation Causes Reaction.

With the approach of the long holiday, liquidation led to a recession of practically $2 a bale from the week's high point, and hedge selling was resumed as a protection to cotton moved during the holidays. Some of the decline was attributed also to the rapid movement of the crop to market. Not only is cotton showing up in large volume in the Texas markets, but the movement is rapidly increasing at the markets east of the Mississippi River. This early movement is attributed mainly to the early maturity of the crop owing to the heat and dry weather in many portions of the belt.

There has been a decided increase in the demand for spots not only from domestic mills but also from exporters. The low prices have attracted buyers on the fear that at these low levels there is more likely to be an advance rather than a further decline. The low prices also have attracted an increased demand from large spot dealers who find that the present levels of values permit them to carry the cotton at less cost and hedge it to better advantage.

Some traders assert that one explanation of the rapid movement of this crop is the use of motor trucks in hauling cotton from the plantations to the accumulating centres. Cotton has arrived by truck even in New Orleans for the first time in the history of cotton transportation.

Effect of Farm Board Aid.

The action of the Farm Loan Board in agreeing to lend on cotton up to 90 per cent of the market value has resulted in many farmers refusing to accept present prices and has also greatly increased the volume of cotton handled by the cooperative associations. As a further result, the basis in the interior has advanced.

There has been a gratifying increase in exports during the past few weeks and shipments are now running well ahead of last season. Advices from abroad indicate improvement in the demand for cotton cloths, Manchester reporting not only a good demand from the home trade but increasing trade with China due to the improvement in silver exchange and indications of a lessening of the boycott in India.

There has also been an improvement in the domestic goods trade, a considerable demand being reported for printcloths at higher prices. This increased demand has been stimulated by the lower prices and the fears of the trade that prices may harden in the near future.

With the demand for goods picking up both at home and abroad, it is expected that there will soon be a marked improvement in the demand for spots in the South and probably also a gradual improvement in the price of raw cotton.

SPEED POWER PLANT WORK.

Contractors Ahead of Schedule on $30,000,000 Susquehanna Project.

Construction work on the $30,000,000 Safe Harbor hydroelectric development of Aldred & Co. on the Susquehanna River is running ahead of schedule, due to favorable weather conditions in recent months, it was learned yesterday. There are 1,800 men at work, and the number will be increased to 2,500 this year.

The $30,000,000 represents only the cost of the powerhouse and dam and the initial installation of turbines having a capacity of 231,000 horsepower. Foundations are being built for additional turbines which will give an ultimate capacity of 500,000 horsepower.

ACTS TO PROTECT FARMERS.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WARSAW, Aug. 31.—Baltic, Balkan and American cooperation was realized in Warsaw at the agrarian conference of representatives of eight countries which concluded last night. The conference results exceeded the most optimistic expectations.

A number of resolutions, designed to have a far-reaching effect on the agricultural and industrial relations of European countries, were adopted. Elimination of competition and the standardization and improvement of the quality of goods for export were declared to be the first aims of the agrarian exporting countries. It was decided to propose that the League of Nations draft a convention prohibiting export taxes on farm products.

A special committee formed to study the problem of agrarian credits will meet Nov. 10, and the conference, to be convoked yearly, will be held in the Fall of 1931.

Farewell speeches of the delegates yesterday made it clear that the conference was non-political and that it was not aimed at any particular industrial States, but was merely an attempt by agricultural Europe to organize herself and an attempt by 95,000,000 farm producers and consumers of industrial goods to unite to protect their own interests.

RETAIL SALES FELL 6.7% IN SIX MONTHS

DETROIT DECLINE LARGEST

Decrease in 22 Stores There Was 16.5 Per Cent, Against 10.6 Per Cent in 27 Here.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31.—Total net sales of 523 retail credit establishments, representing seven types of stores in twenty-four cities, decreased 6.7 per cent for the first six months of 1930, as compared with those for the corresponding period in 1929, according to a national survey of retail credit business made by the Department of Commerce and released for publication today.

Total net sales of the retail stores included in the survey amounted to $560,708,855 for the first six months of 1930. On the ground that retail prices in general have fallen during the period under consideration, the reduction of 6.7 per cent "does not indicate that the quantity of goods sold changed in the same proportion," says the report.

Dr. Frank M. Surface, Assistant Director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, who assisted in the survey, said that wholesale prices other than farm and food products declined 8 per cent from June, 1929, to June, 1930, and that the cost of living, which includes in addition to clothing and house furnishings such items as rent, light, heat, &c., declined approximately 3 per cent in the same period.

Credit sales increased slightly in proportion to cash sales during the period studied, the survey showed, and regular charge accounts were 48.3 per cent of the total sales in 1929 and 48.9 per cent in 1930. Instalment sales, or deferred payments, were 10.4 per cent of total sales in 1929 and 10.5 per cent in 1930. While instalment sales showed a slight proportionate increase for the first six months of 1930 over the corresponding period of 1929, this increase occurred during January, February and March.

The greatest decline in total net sales was found in Detroit, automobile manufacturing centre, where the percentage of decrease in twenty-two stores amounted to 16.5 per cent, as compared with the decrease of twenty-seven stores in New York City of 10.6 per cent.

The seven types of stores included in the survey were department, furniture, jewelry, men's clothing, shoes, women's specialty and electrical appliances.

The average loss on open credit accounts of all stores was 0.6 per cent and of instalment accounts 1.9 per cent. Bad debt losses on instalment sales were thus more than three times as great as those on open credit sales for the stores reporting.

Credit losses in eighteen New York stores amounted to 1 per cent of the open credit sales, and to 0.3 per cent of the total sales.

Women's specialty stores had the highest percentage of returns and allowances on cash sales; shoe stores had the highest percentage on open credit sales and jewelry stores had the highest percentage on instalment sales. Returns and allowances in thirteen New York stores during the period studied amount to 4.2 per cent on cash sales, 10.8 per cent on open credit sales in fifteen stores and 13.7 per cent on instalment accounts in eight stores.

OUR SHIPPING RISE OUTLINED TO HOOVER

PRIVATE LINES SPREADING

Government Steadily Retiring—Shipbuilding Now Giving Employment to Thousands.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31.—Progress made by the American merchant marine, including the increases in shipbuilding and in private ship ownership, and the gradual retirement of the government from the business, are described in a report to President Hoover by Julius Klein, Assistant Secretary of Commerce, made public at the White House today.

The report traces the upward trend under the Jones-White law, permitting greater construction loan funds, and larger overseas mail contracts. It shows that whereas the total private and government-owned tonnage had decreased from 6,816,879 in July, 1925, to 6,690,354 in July, 1930, there was already considerably more tonnage completed and under contract or in course of construction this year, than there was two years ago. The government now owns 92,113 tons less than in 1925.

Appropriations for the Shipping Board and Merchant Marine Corporation have been reduced by $7,343,000 in two years, Dr. Klein states, adding that the board has loaned $43,678,000 for vessel construction, and committed itself to $82,068,000 additional. He also says that contracts have been let for forty-six ships of a total value of approximately $184,000,000.

Dr. Klein touches on the contribution made to overcome unemployment, stating that 19,000 men are now working on ship construction.

Dr. Klein's Report.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
WASHINGTON, D. C.
Aug. 29, 1930.

The President:
The White House,
Washington, D. C.

My dear Mr. President:

I am in receipt of your request for a report on the development of the American merchant marine since the passage of the merchant marine act of 1928, providing for enlarged loan funds and overseas mail contracts, which was initiated by President Coolidge.

The result of these laws and the administrative measures taken has been a steady advance in our merchant marine. We have seen a steady increase in ship building, an increase in privately owned merchant marine, and a steady retirement of the government from business. This is evidenced by the following table of the active American merchant fleet in gross tons:

	—Gross Tons.—		—Gross Tons.—
July,'28	5,707,043	1,604,450	1,031,412	1,604,450

All important trade routes from the United States to other parts of the world are now served with American owned and operated ships, there being ninety-six such routes.

The volume of shipping construction in the different calendar years is shown in the following table:

	Gross Tons.
1929	208,800

Tonnage Under Contract or Building.

	Gross Tons.

Work of the Shipping Board.

The United States Shipping Board and Merchant Marine Corporation have continued with increased vigor to reduce expenses and to withdraw from government operation of merchant ships. Appropriations for these agencies have decreased from $13,689,000 in 1928-29 to $6,346,000 in 1930-31, a reduction of $7,343,000 in two years. Since January, 1929, 151 vessels have been sold for private operation in established foreign trade routes and for three unrestricted operations and eighty-nine sold for scrapping. Increased confidence in privately owned shipping in ocean-borne commerce is resulting from government retirement.

The Shipping Board and Merchant Fleet Corporation are now operating seventeen lines—eight from the Atlantic Seaboard, nine from the Gulf and nothing from the Pacific Coast—out of the total of ninety-six lines mentioned above. Steps are in progress with a view to consolidating and disposing of some of these lines and it is hoped that in a very few years the government will be free of ship operation.

Twenty-five private companies are now operating seventy-nine lines—forty-four from the Atlantic Seaboard, fourteen from the Gulf and twenty-one from the Pacific Coast.

Under authority of Congress the Shipping Board has loaned to ship owners for the construction of vessels a total of $43,678,000, of which $4,685,222 has already been repaid and commitments have been taken for a further $82,068,000. This assistance has contributed materially to the upbuilding of the merchant marine.

Ocean Mail Contracts.

Prior to the 4th of March, 1929, contracts for ocean mail carriage had been awarded to twenty-four lines calling for annual payments of about $14,000,000. These lines had undertaken as part of their contracts to construct sixteen new vessels with a total tonnage of 210,500. Early in your administration the Interdepartmental Committee (comprised of the Postmaster General, the Secretaries of Commerce and Navy and the chairman of the Shipping Board) was appointed to reconsider the whole question of ocean mail contracts in relation to merchant marine policies, with a view to greater insistence upon new construction in such fashion as to upbuild and strengthen the merchant marine.

As a result of the changes in policy made at that time sixteen further contracts have been awarded entailing an average annual expenditure of $14,000,000 over a ten-year period, and due to the much heavier requirements for new ship construction as a consideration of the contract, forty-six vessels have been contracted for, of a minimum of 407,000 total tonnage, the aggregate cost of which will be approximately $184,000,000. In addition, carriage of ocean mails, regularity of service, Americanization of crews and other objectives of importance redound to the government in service rendered.

General.

Other matters which have contributed to development of merchant shipping have been the long outstanding loadline dispute, which has been settled by legislation and by international agreements soon to be placed before the Senate for consideration. Further measures for safety at sea have been developed by the international conferences which have been held. Legislation passed by the last Congress partially cleared some of the existing ambiguity in contract relationships with the post office.

There are many tangible results from all these activities which are gradually restoring the American merchant marine. The new ships being built are modern and able to hold their own upon the seas. There are about 19,000 men now employed in shipyards on new construction and 7,500 in repair yards. At least an equal number are employed in supplying material to the shipyards. A large increase in the number of men employed aboard ship will develop.

It may be recalled that if American foreign trade is to be protected in equitable rates and in full distribution of goods, there must be some substantial movement of American-flag ships on each of our great trade routes. This is today substantially established.

Our problem for the future is to maintain these routes, constantly keeping them abreast of world improvement in ship construction and operation, and to secure their expansion to that degree which gives protection to American foreign trade.

Very sincerely yours,
JULIUS KLEIN,
Assistant Secretary of Commerce.

MOST YOUNG TEACHERS ARE CALLED UNFIT

The majority of young American school teachers are mediocre, uncultured, and generally unfit, Clyde R. Miller, director of educational service at Teachers College, Columbia University, declared yesterday.

Communities all over the country are practicing unwise economy in manning their schools with undertrained young people who can be hired for small salaries, Mr. Miller said.

"School boards build modern structures, fully equipped with swimming pools, fine gymnasiums, modern ventilation and then rest on their laurels" he continued. "They employ the foolish expedient of saving money by engaging training-school graduates who have had no more than a high school education before beginning their professional studies. With that kind of teaching all their equipment is useless.

"One mature teacher, capable and experienced, who can be hired for $3,000, is worth more to a community than ten who can be employed for $1,000."

He recommended that training schools enter into an agreement to admit no more students than are likely to find employment, and to centre their major effort on the further training of teachers already in service. Public and private schools should give leaves of absence with pay to teachers to permit them to undertake graduate study, he said.

PLAY BRIDGE MATCH TODAY.

Culbertson Team to Defend Asbury Park Trophy.

The victorious Culbertson contract bridge team of four, winners of the City of Asbury Park Trophy at the first Summer tournament of the American Bridge League, held at that resort last month, will play a challenge match, with the trophy at stake, against the runner-up team in the tournament, captained by Philip H. Sims of Deal, N. J., at the Knickerbocker Whist Club, 35 West Forty-third Street, at 2 o'clock this afternoon.

The Culbertson team includes Mr. and Mrs. Ely Culbertson, Baron Waldemar von Zedtwitz and Theodore Lightner. Mr. Sims's fellow-players are Lee Langdon, Willard Karn and Oswald Jacoby. Forty boards of duplicate will be played, a pair at east and west playing against a pair from the other team at north and south at one table, with the positions reversed at the second table. Total points scored by both pairs on each team will decide the match.

In the finals of the Asbury Park tournament the Culbertson team won by a margin of less than 500 points. All eight of the contestants are ranked among the best twenty contract players in the country.

Today's match will be the last appearance of the Culbertson team before its departure for England, to engage in an international match with an English team.

UNDONE BY HIS OWN VALOR.

The self-sufficiency of George Sun, American-born Chinese laundryman of 724 East 163d Street, the Bronx, got him into difficulties late Saturday night, just when a patrolman was trying to be friendly.

Patrolman Pfenning of the Morisania station noticed a large closed automobile, occupied by five Chinese, cruising about the streets and repeatedly passing the laundry. Visions of tong murders passed through his mind and he stepped into the laundry, where George was still at work at his ironing board.

Pfenning inquired further and learned that an automatic pistol was the cause of George's fearlessness. He took him into custody and yesterday the Chinese was held in $1,000 bail in Morrisania Court charged with violation of the Sullivan law.

SMALL TRADE GAINS IN WEST REPORTED

MERCHANTS' STOCKS LOW

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Aug. 31.—Business in the West picked up last week, leading lines showing small gains, the most important being the larger numbers of orders for steel both for present and future use. Steel backlogs, which had run down more than a month, were enlarged, and indications of better buying after the Labor Day holidays are seen by leading interests. Operations of steel mills in the Chicago district were slightly increased to 55 and 56 per cent of capacity, while a year ago reductions were under way. Expectations among steel men here were for an advance soon of $1 a ton in bars, plates and shapes.

Production of steel plates in the Chicago district has been reported as surprisingly large when that of other steel mills is considered.

Aside from an advance of 25 cents a ton in run-of-mine soft coal, the fuel business was slow last week and the Summer months have been marked by less business than usual. In building materials, buying is reported as remaining fair.

Sales for eight months among wholesalers of dry goods and merchandise in general were said to have increased in the last week, though since January they have been fully 10 per cent under those in the same time last year. Reports from merchants who have been here from all parts of the West are that stocks of goods are not large and that prospects are considered fairly favorable.

A feature was the reduction announced in domestic cotton. Retail sales had their seasonal increase. The month's showing was fair but below that of last year, and the eight months' sales are estimated to have been about 8 per cent under those of 1929.

CRUDE RUBBER STOCKS INCREASE IN ENGLAND

Additions Expected to Amount to 375 Tons—Prices of Rubber, Tin and Lead.

It is estimated that London stocks of rubber will show a further increase of about 250 tons on Monday next, and those at Liverpool an increase of about 125 tons.

In the tin market Eastern advices gave 250 tons sold at £139 c. i. f., an advance of 10s, the turnover for the week amounting to only 900 tons. Here yesterday's improvement was maintained owing to realizing and a forecasst of a further increase in the visible supply, which was variously estimated at 700 to 1,000 tons. A certan amount of support was forthcoming and the close was about steady. On balance cash was 20s and three months 17s 6d lower. Sales were 600 tons. Cash sold at £134 17s 6d to £134 5s to £134 12s 6d to £144 10s, September at £135 to £135 5s, three months at £137 5s to £136 5s. The settlement price was £134 15s. In the late trading three months sold at £135 10s to £135 15s. English common tin closed quiet at £135 15s to £146 ex Liverpool.

In the lead market today sales amounted to 200 tons. August sold at £18 13s 9d and November at £18 3s 9d. The settlement price was £18 12s 6d. At the second session September sold at £18 3s 9d. English lead closed firm and 5s dearer at £19 15s.

LIVE STOCK IN CHICAGO.

CHICAGO, Aug. 30.—Prospects are for better prices for live stock, especially cattle, according to analyses of the Department of Agriculture's latest survey. Receipts of cattle here in August were 172,000, the smallest since August, 1884. In this month last year receipts were 189,284 and two years ago 191,069. Both years were below the August average. Three years ago the run was 270,318.

Arrivals of hogs have fallen off, being below last year for the last two months. Receipts this month were slightly under 485,000, and only in two Augusts have they been smaller since 1919. Last year they were 524,584.

Marketing of lambs last week was in full swing, yet the month's total was below the August average, being 345,000, the smallest for the period since 1917. Only three times have they been smaller in the last thirty years.

Cattle prices closed 75 cents to $1 higher on steers, with yearlings up 50 to 75 cents, selling to $12.35 and closing at $12.25, with the bulk of steers $8.50 to $11.50 during the week, the average being $10.50, a jump of 65 cents. The average compared with $14 last year.

Prices of hogs were irregular and 10 to 35 cents lower, with the top $11.65, the close $11.40 and the average $10, a net drop of 15 cents for the week and 35 cents from a year ago. Heavy hogs were preferred at the close.

Sheep interests had a backset that resulted in declines of $1.25 in fat lambs, losing all the recent gain, and establishing an average of $8.60, against $9.40 the previous week and $13.10 last year. Receipts were the heaviest in a considerable time and prices were the lowest in recent years.

Dressed mutton, however, ranged the same as in the previous week in the wholesale market, 13 to 22 cents. Pork loins were 1 cent higher at 17 to 34 cents, against 17 to 30 a year ago, while fresh dressed beef advanced a half cent, ranging at 11½ to 19½ cents compared with 14½ to 24 a year ago.

Frank Price, Former Editor Here, a Pennsylvania Candidate.

PORT JERVIS, N. Y., Aug. 31.—Frank Price, former New York City newspaper editor, who now lives in Lackawaxen, Pa., near Port Jervis, is among the Democratic nominees for Congress in Pennsylvania invited to a conference in Harrisburg on Thursday with Democratic National Chairman Shouse and State Chairman Collins. Mr. Price arranged today to attend the meeting.

SERIOUS CONDITION FOUND IN LIVE STOCK

LAMB CROP UP 8 PER CENT

Drop in Meat Stocks Predicted for First Half of 1931—Vegetable and Fruit Movement Holds Up.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31.—Despite the serious condition facing the live stock industry because of the drought, food supplies are better than average in some cases, it is shown in the report of a survey by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics of the Department of Agriculture, made public today.

The live stock condition is serious, however, it was reiterated, the weather conditions having "increased substantially costs of live stock production at a time when market conditions are most discouraging," with feed grains and hay available per head being about 15 per cent below the five-year average.

With the lamb crop 8 per cent larger than last year and slow buying by feeders, and with cattle feeders also holding off, it was said this presages "substantially smaller" meat supplies in the first half of 1931 than in the same period this year.

However, regarding human food, it was pointed out that 20,000 carloads of fruits and vegetables are being moved weekly, this figure being approximately the same as a year ago, and that movements of potatoes, onions, cabbage, sweet potatoes and apples are moderately active. Potatoes and sweet potatoes were said to have been most seriously affected by the drought, but other vegetables were less seriously affected and "most fruits escaped serious injury."

"Still dry in Georgia. California crops are in good supply, but with prices low. Fair conditions in the Pacific Northwest. The drought is broken in Kansas, but markets there are unfavorable to farmers. In Iowa the corn crop has been cut, but values have increased."

PROVISIONS IN CHICAGO.

CHICAGO, Aug. 31.—Provision specialists here and in Liverpool report the best demand for lard at this season in recent years. Stocks are passing into consumption at a good rate, and expectations are that the return for August will show a good reduction in supplies here. Deliveries of cash lard on September contracts are estimated to be small. Packers have absorbed liquidating sales by September holders and furnished speculative buyers of December and January with all the product that they desired. There is said to be heavy accumulation of distant futures of lard, credited to a leading packer, and commission house books, in some instances, are carrying more lard than at any time in several years.

September and October lard closed the week at the same price, $11.12½, the former gaining 2½ cents, and the latter 12½ cents. December closed at $10.85, a loss of 2½ cents, and January at $10.80, a drop of 10 cents compared with a week ago.

September bellies closed at $13.87½, or 2½ cents lower than the previous week, there being practically no trading.

NEW ENGLAND TRADE DECLINED DURING JULY

BOSTON, Aug. 31 (AP).—Industrial activity in New England at the end of July was at the lowest level in recent years, according to the monthly review of the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston, released today.

"Although there is usually less activity in the midsummer months, the recession this year between June and July was of more than the usual seasonal amount," the review says.

"Quiet conditions prevailed in practically all lines of industry, and about the same volume of manufacturing, in the aggregate, took place in July as in that month in 1924.

"During the first seven months in the current year there has been a severe decline in consumer purchasing power in New England, as is indicated in the fact that estimated wage payments in more than 1,000 identical manufacturing establishments in Massachusetts were approximately $14,000,000 less in that period than in the corresponding period a year ago.

"A similar curtailment in actual purchasing has not been evident until recently, since Massachusetts department stores reported sales for the first half of this year as of the same volume as in that period of 1929. In June and July, however, there were declines of about 7 and 6 per cent from a year ago, and retail trade appears to be following the downward swing in the industrial activity.

"Boston department store sales during the first half of August were less than those in this period a year ago.

"In July New England textile activity declined still more. Cotton consumption declined to the smallest monthly amount since the records started in 1919, and there was a sharp drop in silk machinery activity. Consumption of raw wool in this district in July increased by a little less than the customary seasonal amount.

"The volume of boots and shoes produced in New England in July was about the same as in June, but usually there is a slight increase for those two months.

"The building industry was unusually quiet in July, and during the first seven months of this year total new contracts awarded in New England was about 14 per cent less than in the corresponding period last year. Total car loadings in New England have reflected generally slow condition of industry and trade, and in the first six weeks of the third quarter declined approximately 17 per cent from those during the corresponding period a year ago.

"The percentage of regular accounts outstanding at the 1st of July collected in July in New England department stores was 44.5 per cent, compared with 49.8 per cent in July, 1929, and 48.3 per cent in 1928."

GAIN IN COCOA TRADE SEEN.

Upswing After Labor Day Predicted by New York Exchange.

Greatly increased activity in all phases of the cocoa industry is expected by the New York Cocoa Exchange to follow the Labor Day holiday, according to the official review of the Exchange. The heavy grinding season for manufacturers will begin after the holiday and the two major crops, from West Africa and Brazil, will start to move to consuming industries before the end of the year.

Manufacturers have been cautious buyers of raw materials in recent weeks, chiefly because of hot weather and uncertainty over the general business outlook. The result has been the decline of raw cocoa bean values to the lowest levels in the history of the New York Cocoa Exchange. Futures declined 57 to 61 points here last week. In the spot market declines were even greater, with standard grades selling off 1⅛ cents a pound.

PORT HERE PASSED 432,580 IN 6 MONTHS

INBOUND TRAFFIC DROPS

The combined figures for inbound and outbound passenger traffic for the first half of 1930 shows a total of 432,580 passengers passing through the Port of New York, against 431,587 for the first six months of 1929, according to a report made public yesterday by the Bureau of Commerce of the Port of New York Authority.

The outbound passenger movement in the first part of this year increased 9 per cent, the chief factor being the return of thousands of non-emigrant aliens to their native lands. This more than offset the decrease of 6.3 per cent in inbound traffic, giving this year an increase over last.

In an analysis of commerce for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, the bureau reported that the tonnage handled at the Port of New York constituted 25.7 per cent of the total for the country, which was even better than the average during the early post-war period.

"The supremacy of New York as a passenger port," the bulletin concludes, "was emphasized on Wednesday, July 16, when four of the world's largest vessels, the Leviathan, Majestic, Berengaria and Bremen, sailed for Europe with an aggregate of 6,000 travelers aboard, more passengers than depart in an entire month from all other North Atlantic ports combined.

"Passengers sailing between the Port of New York and other United States ports on the Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific Coasts, including Long Island Sound and Hudson River routes, reached the total of 279,674 during the second quarter of the year, April to June inclusive.

"The total passengers carried on domestic routes for the first half of the year reached 404,283, not far below the foreign level. These figures do not include one-day round-trip excursionists carried by Sound and river lines.

"Tonnage statistics of foreign trade are sometimes a more useful indicator than value figures because of the wide fluctuations in unit prices of commodities entering into import and export trade. A recent report of the United States Shipping Board, which is the source of these figures, carries a revised total for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, of 28,528,314 tons. The revised total represents an increase of 11.1 per cent over the tonnage for the fiscal year 1928, which was 25,672,840 tons."

FIVE LIFEBOAT CREWS READY FOR RACE TODAY

The picked crews of five liners in New York Harbor, representing four nations, will line up at 11:15 A. M. today in the Hudson River off the foot of 120th Street for the start of the annual international lifeboat race for the championship of the world. The seamen will race two nautical miles to a point off Eighty-first Street, irrespective of weather conditions.

The prize will be the Todd Lifeboat Racing Trophy. In addition, the first three crews to finish will receive cups, the first donated by United Dry Docks, Inc., and the others, together with gold, silver and bronze medals for the men, by the Neptune Association, which is the sponsor of the race.

The competing crews are from the Mauretania of the Cunard Line, the Stavangerfjord of the Norwegian-American Line, the Sud Africano of the Linea Sud Americana, the President Harding of the United States Lines and the Exarch of the Export Line. The Sud Africano now holds two legs on the trophy and will win permanent possession by finishing first in today's race.

First American Ship In Many Years to Join Antarctic Hunt.

Dwarfing the tiny craft which once sailed out of Nantucket when this country was a power in the whaling industry, the 6,000-ton Frango of the newly organized American Whaling Company steamed out of New York Harbor yesterday morning on its maiden voyage to the Antarctic, carrying the American flag into the whale hunt in those waters for the first time in many years.

With her went a crew of sixty-nine veteran Norwegian whalers, taken on last month at Santefjord, on the east coast of Norway, where the formal change in registry was made, giving the new whaling company its first ship. Captain Johannes Smith of Freeport, L. I., commands the craft and Captain Olaf Stokken of Sunnyfield, N. J., is in charge of the expedition.

If the present voyage is successful, the American flag may once more loom large in the Antarctic whale hunt, Amos D. Carver, president of the company, said in announcing that he plans to bring other vessels into the service and ultimately build a fleet which may compete with the English, Norwegian and Danish ships now monopolizing the industry. On the Frango's trip South she will be joined by four "killer" boats now being prepared on the Georgia coast.

SOUTHAMPTON INN RAIDED SECOND TIME

CHARGED WITH GAMBLING

Names of 2 Women and 4 Men Patrons Taken—They May Be Called as Witnesses.

Special to The New York Times.

SOUTHAMPTON, L. I., Aug. 31.—The Shinnecock Hills Inn, patronized by members of the Summer colony here, was raided last night for the second time in a week and five men were arrested. The names of six of the patrons, who may be summoned as witnesses, were taken by the raiding officers.

Deputy Sheriffs William Hunt and Ronald Baker of District Attorney Blue's staff made the arrests. They were making a round of the five establishments which were raided a week ago last night and had not expected to find any of them open. They were astonished, on approaching the inn, to hear the click of the roulette wheel and the voices of men and women at play. In the raid last week they had confiscated all the tables and paraphernalia.

As the deputies entered the unguarded door they saw about twenty-five men and women around a single table, fingering vari-colored chips. Two negro waiters were serving drinks, they said. So quietly did the deputies enter that no one knew they were there until they called for suspension of play.

Tells of Bribe Offer.

According to the deputies, one of the men taken in the raid offered $2,000 in cash for his release. The offer was refused and the deputies into custody, charged with gambling, the following:

Steve J. Levey of 416 West Eighty-sixth Street, William Hildreth of 40 West Seventy-second Street, George Bucker of 245 West Seventy-second Street, Fred Clarke of the Hotel Pennsylvania and Philip Moran of 321 West Ninety-sixth Street.

All of the men, except Moran, were arrested a week ago Saturday in the first raid and were indicted last Monday on charges of gambling. Levey was free under $2,500 bail, the others under $1,500 bail each. The deputies took them before Justice of the Peace Edward White, who held each in an additional $1,000 bail for hearing Tuesday morning. The paraphernalia, all new, was taken to the county seat at Riverhead.

Took Names of Six.

The deputies took down the names of six men and women, who they said were at the roulette table when they entered. The names were given out by the District Attorney as follows:

Mrs. Stewart Waller of Southampton.

Arthur C. Rand, 960 Park Avenue.

Mr. and Mrs. John Gillespie, 161 East Seventy-ninth Street.

Gerald Borden of Boston, Mass.

At the Waller home last night a friend of the family said that Mr. and Mrs. Waller were out, but he was unable to tell where they had spent Saturday evening. Mrs. Farnum, reached at her home in New York, said that her husband was in Southampton, but so far as she knew he was not in the inn at the time of the raid. The police were inclined to believe that some of the other names and addresses given by patrons were fictitious.

Baker and Hunt said the raid was conducted quietly. They said both the guests and the men who were behind the tables were astonished when they learned that only two men were in the raiding party. The guests were not detained.

Arthur Williams of 222 West 130th Street and Doyle Dixon of 301 West 150th Street, the waiters, were not arrested, but their names were taken by the deputies and they will probably be summoned as witnesses.

TESTS 2,003 CRIMINALS.

Fifty-seven per cent of the 2,003 male prisoners in the New Jersey State prison, studied in a recent survey conducted by the National Prison Emergency Committee, were below average intelligence, according to a statement issued yesterday. The statement was one of several covering different phases of the study which have been released recently by Colonel Joseph D. Sears of the committee.

The analysis of the intelligence of the prisoners studied, according to the announcement, indicated that 11.1 per cent were of superior intelligence, 6.8 per cent of high average, 12.7 of average, 12.3 of low average and 57.1 of either inferior intelligence, border line or feeble minded.

Types of crimes differ between the more intelligent groups and the less intelligent, the statement indicates. The upper 31.3 per cent from the standpoint of intelligence provided more than their proportion of the embezzlers, forgers, prohibition violators and bigamists. The 68.8 per cent in the lower intelligence groupings committed more than their proportionate share of murders, arson and assaults. Larceny and burglary of all types were in equal proportion throughout the entire intelligence range.

SCORE WORD CHANGES.

Puzzlers Hold Dictionaries Should Continue Compound Usage.

Special to The New York Times.

SEASIDE PARK, N. J., Aug. 31.—That the change in dictionaries of two separate words to one word does not meet the approval of all members of the National Puzzlers' League of America was demonstrated here today. The matter came up casually at a conference when it was decided to postpone the business for the day so that the members could take advantage of entertainments planned for them.

One member mentioned that the compilers of at least two dictionaries had agreed to insert the word "carefree" as one word in their next editions and other members contended that "care-free" should be a compound word.

Several cities are anxious to get the next convention of the league, among them New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore, the requests from the last named being the most numerous.

Hungry Zoo Rhinoceros Outwits Keepers; Hides Mark to Show When It Has Had Enough

Despite the fact that he is putting on years and has lost both of the horns he once had, Ralph, the rhinoceros at the Bronx Zoo, is beginning to present something of a problem. Even Head Keeper John Toomey is in a quandary, for Ralph, it seems, is one of the greatest food consumers in captivity, and the amount of hay and things he can pack away runs high, sometimes into the red.

In years gone by, Ralph's keepers discovered that their charge could eat hay just as long as they kept feeding it to him. In fact, they realized quite frequently that they were still feeding Ralph his breakfast two hours after he should have started on his lunch. Something had to be done about it—and something was done.

Ralph, in common with all rhinoceroses, has a hide which might best be described as telescopic. And when Ralph eats, the overlapping folds take up and smooth out, and slowly Ralph expands. The extremes of his capacity have never been reached.

By a process of trial and error, over a period of years, Ralph's keepers, so the story goes, determined the point in his repast at which he was apparently filled with sufficient food to keep his body and spirit together by making a mark in the folds of his hide. It was all very simple after that. They kept pitchforking hay to him until the mark unfolded. Ralph then invariably went to sleep.

But this Summer—unique for its heat—a new wrinkle has developed. Ralph has taken to the water tank in his yard, obviously to cool off, and has whiled away practically the entire Summer there. When feeding time came his keepers had to carry his hay to him—and Ralph was able to bulge without revealing when he had had enough. Once more the feed bill mounted.

At first a water-gauge was considered to mark the expansion and contraction. But that, like other suggestions, was found impractical. Now the solution is imminent. The next time Ralph emerges from his tank, a brilliant white Plimsoll mark will be painted upon his bulging sides. Sufficient free-board will be allowed, the right quantity of food will be administered, and Ralph will be shoved back into the tank. The load-line will then be painted—and Ralph's little scheme will be foiled.

But one hitch still remains. It seems that after lying immersed so long Ralph's hull has accumulated barnacles and other subaqueous crustaceans, all of which tend to drag him down in the water, and will undoubtedly take the place of an equal amount of food. And when Ralph is deprived of the least little bit of his allotted share the welkin generally rings.

So, something will have to be done about that.

STEALS $75,000 GEMS AT A SHORE HOTEL

OVERLOOKS $17,000 MORE

Heirlooms Taken While Baltimore Couple Is on Boardwalk—Police Kept Case Secret.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Aug. 31.—The theft of jewelry valued at $75,000 from the suite at the Hotel Ambassador here occupied by Mr. and Mrs. John Edward Johnston of Charlecote Place, Baltimore, was reported to the police here today. The gems were taken between 11 P. M. and last midnight. Mr. Johnston, a broker, is socially prominent in Baltimore.

The jewelry, all insured, consisted of fifteen pieces, including some which had been in the Johnston family for several generations, Mr. Johnston said. The most valuable piece was a diamond-studded bracelet worth $15,000.

Mr. and Mrs. Johnston left their suite about 11 o'clock last night for a walk along the Boardwalk and when they returned an hour later they discovered the theft. Nothing else in the room had been disturbed and there was nothing to show that entrance to it had been forced.

The police declined to discuss the case. The only information which became public came from Mr. Johnston, after the police had concealed the disappearance of the gems for several hours.

Although the thief emptied one jewel box, he overlooked another casket which contained jewels valued at $17,000, leading to the belief that he had no advance knowledge of the Johnston valuables. It was also believed that the thief may have worked hurriedly, as evidently he had not gone through the rooms carefully.

Smudges on the jewel casket that was rifled were photographed by police fingerprint experts and an effort will be made to check any fingerprints which may be developed with the records of the New York and Philadelphia Police Departments.

FALLS IN ELEVATOR SHAFT.

Retired Merchant Drops to Top of Car From Sixth Floor.

Adolph Berger, 65 years old, a retired clothing merchant of 195 Claremont Avenue, was seriously injured last night when he fell through the elevator shaft from the sixth floor of the apartment house in which he lives. Reynold Bryan, a Negro, who was operating the elevator, had just left the ground floor in it when he heard a terrific crash atop the car. He stopped it and, looking up through an opening in the roof, saw a man lying there.

Bryan telephoned to police headquarters, and Police and Fire Department emergency squads were sent to the house. They lifted Berger from the shaft and sent him to Knickerbocker Hospital, where physicians said his condition was critical. The police found the door to the elevator shaft on the sixth floor open. They think Berger fell accidentally.

STRIKE CLASH IN CORDOVA.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MADRID, Aug. 31.—The situation in Cordova is improving, but another clash between the police and strikers occurred in the market place last night when the police attempted to scatter groups of strikers. The latter hurled stones from doorways and balconies, and the police were obliged to charge them. A corporal was wounded.

Near-by shops were closed, but they were compelled to reopen for the public. Strikers and civil guards are patrolling the streets. Banks are strongly guarded. The Governor is holding frequent meetings with arbitration boards, and he professes to have strong hopes of an early settlement, as the attitude of the workers is conciliatory. The water, light and bakery services are uninterrupted.

CORUNA, Spain, Aug. 31 (AP).—Disorder climaxed a meeting today of the Monarchist Union, composed of former members and admirers of the Primo de Rivera dictatorship, with several persons injured and numerous arrests made.

The trouble occurred after those who attended the meeting came outside. A waiting crowd hissed and beat the participants until they were rescued by police. Most of the crowd's fury seemed to be directed against one of the speakers, Juan Antonio Primo de Rivera, a son of the late dictator.

WEST COAST KEEN ON SHIP BIDS HERE

44 LINERS SAIL IN 24 HOURS

Special to The New York Times.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Aug. 31.—Shipbuilders here are keenly interested in the result of the bids for construction of four new passenger and cargo liners for the New York-San Francisco service of the Panama Mail Line, which will be opened in New York on Tuesday.

Specifications for the new ships have been in the hands of the shipbuilders for several weeks and a determined effort to bring the work to the West Coast is to be made by officials of the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation and the Los Angeles Shipbuilding and Drydock Company.

Edward T. Ford, head of the Panama Mail Line on the Pacific Coast, has said that he favors the ships being built here, but the final decision will come from the New York offices of the Grace Line, owners of the Panama Mail Company.

With forty-four vessels sailing from San Francisco during the twenty-four-hour period ended last midnight, this port experienced the heaviest day of the year and came within three sailings of equaling the harbor's record for sailings in a single day.

Included in the sailings were vessels destined for ports all over the world, some of which make San Francisco only two or three times a year. Most of the vessels were of American registry, but there was a sprinkling of foreign flag tonnage in the list. With few exceptions they all carried large cargoes.

With a cargo of manufactured goods valued at about $1,000,000 and a large list of passengers, the Panama Pacific liner Pennsylvania is due to arrive here tomorrow morning from New York. Included in the cargo are 300 automobiles, all checked as baggage.

GUATEMALA PUSHING AHEAD

Tractors and plows, disk harrows, subsoilers, modern corn planters, rotary hoes, ditching implements, corn husking and other machines are being used in the cultivation of corn, rice, beans, sugar cane, coffee and in the exploitation of mahogany in Guatemala, according to a field representative of the Pan-American Union down in the heart of that country. The representative reported an interview he had with one of the country's prominent business men, C. H. Logan.

"What can you say as to machinery in highway construction?" Mr. Logan was asked.

"During the past few years," he replied, "a surprising amount of work has been done. The national road-building program was considerably advanced by the planters. These men formed agricultural societies to promote the interests of their respective districts; they have purchased tractors and other road-building equipment. This activity virtually amounts to private road construction.

"Motor trucks are replacing the oxcart and the pack mule. Tractors and gasoline are admitted to Guatemala free of duty. The government pays the freight from port of entry on the first 200 tractors purchased by the people."

Concerning the international coffee situation, Mr. Logan said:

"The world's demand for better coffee has compelled the roasters to increase the percentage of 'mild coffee' in their blends from say 10 per cent some twenty-five years ago to 30 and 40 per cent today. If mild coffees were put on a separate market it would place the whole coffee trade on a sounder basis."

FATHER KILLS SON IN ROW.

YORK, Pa., Aug. 31 (AP).—Ora Kauffman, 21 years old, was killed tonight by his father, John Kauffman, during a quarrel at their home near Yoe, this county.

The father is reported to have upbraided the youth for keeping his sister out on an all-night drinking party, and in the ensuing argument the youth struck his father, who took a pocketknife from a pocket and stabbed his son.

The stabbing occurred on the stairway of the modest home of the Kauffmans. The father was ascending the steps to break up an argument which the boy was having with his mother, confined to bed by injuries received in a fall, because she had been remonstrating with her daughter for her conduct.

As the father reached the second step from the top the boy rushed him, pummeling him with his fists, and the father drew a knife, struck upward, severing an artery. State police took the father to the county jail, to be held for the action of the coroner's jury.

'BAD JOHN' WRIGHT WAITS DEATH IN BED

UNAWARE SON IS SLAIN

WHITESBURG, Ky., Aug. 31 (AP).—"Bad John" Wright, former feudist, who in later years was respected as an intrepid mountain peace officer, lies at the point of death today at his home in Wise County, Va., near the Kentucky border, unaware that his son, Sam, met violent death yesterday in Pike County, Ky.

"Bad John" earned the sobriquet by killing more than thirty men while serving in positions of authority in the border counties of Virginia and Kentucky. All his killings were within the law, his friends hasten to tell questioners, safe in the knowledge that the events of the famed Wright-Jones feud of forty years ago have long since been forgotten.

The border patrolman, whose age is estimated between 87 and 96 years, was an intimate friend of John Fox Jr., the novelist, and provided him with much material for his books dealing with mountain life. "Devil Jack Tolliver," one of the characters in the Fox novel "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," was a prototype of John Wright.

"Bad John's" admirers hasten to add, however, that "Bad John was not like 'Devil Jack.' 'Bad John' was not really bad, they say, citing his record as an enforcer of the law, whereas Fox's famed character was depicted as a bloodthirsty two-gun man of the hills who killed for the mere fun of it.

"Bad John" in later years became more familiarly known as "Uncle John," and has friends without number in Letcher and Pike Counties, Ky., and Wise County, Va. Sometimes he was called "the Tall Sycamore of the Elkhorn" because of his gigantic stature and his residence near Elkhorn Creek.

Until several days ago, when he was stricken ill, "Bad John" was active as a deputy sheriff of Wise County. He had previously served as sheriff, deputy and justice of the peace in the several counties he patrolled.

The officer was a deadly enemy of "Devil Anse" Hatfield, principal in the feud between the Hatfields and McCoys. "Bad John" was never able to capture "Devil Anse," who died with his boots off in ripe old age. William R. (Cap) Hatfield, son of "Devil Anse" and last survivor of the feud, also died with his boots off in Baltimore several days ago, and "Bad John" seems destined to pass to the great beyond in the same fashion.

"Bad John's" son, Sam Wright, was killed by Melvin Branham during a family quarrel in front of Sam's home in Pike County, Ky., yesterday. Branham also was shot to death, but the coroner's jury was unable to decide who killed him. The jury decided that Sam Wright was slain by Branham.

5 KILLED, MANY HURT IN TRAFFIC MISHAPS

Two Others From Keasbey, N. J., Die in Maryland Crash—Six in Overturned Auto.

Five persons were killed and many injured in automobile accidents in and around the city yesterday and two residents of Keasbey, N. J., died from injuries sustained in an automobile crash near Elkton, Md.

Mrs. Carrie Marum, 60 years old, and her husband, Edward Marum, 69, a retired business man, were crossing West End Avenue at 104th Street on their way to their home at 895 West End Avenue last night when they were knocked down by a taxicab driven by Kurt Schenderlein of 9 Fort Washington Avenue.

Mrs. Marum was killed instantly. Her husband suffered severe internal injuries and was taken to Knickerbocker Hospital. Schenderlein was arrested on a technical charge of homicide.

An unidentified man was killed when he stepped in front of a Public Service bus at Hudson Avenue and Bergen Turnpike, North Bergen, last night. Jacob Bernhard of 827 Bergenline Avenue, Union City, driver of the bus, was held on a technical charge of manslaughter.

One person was killed and four critically injured when a motorcycle crashed into an automobile at Remsen and Ditmas Avenues, Brooklyn. Vennerendo Pennisi, 34, of 278 Evergreen Avenue, Brooklyn, who was operating the car, was killed, and Antonio Lioatto, 40, of the same address, who was riding with him; Lioatto's daughter Sebastiane, 4, and Pennisi's children, Mary, 6, and Josephine, 4, all in a side car, suffered possibly fractured skulls.

John Meehan, 40 years old, of 1,819 Atlantic Avenue, Brooklyn, suffered a fractured skull when he was struck by an automobile at the Bowery and Canal Street early yesterday morning. A policeman chased the driver of the car for more than a mile over Manhattan Bridge into Brooklyn and arrested him on charges of felonious assault and leaving the scene of an accident. The driver said he was Jerry Schiraldi, 33, of 142 West End Avenue.

WOODSTOWN, N. J., Aug. 31.—Mrs. Sadie Balick, 40, of 2,409 West Street, Wilmington, Del., was killed and five members of her family seriously hurt when their car was in collision with a truck and overturned on the Harding Highway at Pole Tavern near here. The State police said that Jacob Balick, 18, driver of the car, tried to pass a truck driven by Herbert W. Wayne of Wilmington.

ELKTON, Md., Aug. 31.—Two cousins, both named Joseph Deaks, of Keasbey, N. J., were fatally injured near here today when their automobile got out of control and crashed into a tree. They died in the Union Hospital here. Stephen and James Deaks and Joseph Csurko, who were with them, were treated for injuries.

Ban on Night Auto Parking In Theatre District Revived

The ban on parking in the Times Square theatrical district, the area bounded by Sixth and Eighth Avenues and Forty-second and Fiftieth Streets, which was lifted last June by Police Commissioner Mulrooney for the Summer months between 7:30 and 9 P. M., will be put into force again at 7:30 o'clock tomorrow night.

Although Dr. William Schroeder Jr., chairman of the Sanitation Commission, put an end to the towing off of cars parked in Manhattan and Brooklyn last June, he announced at the time that this order did not affect the theatrical district, and that cars parked in that district during the restricted hours would still be carted off to a police station, and the owners would have to pay a $10 towage charge to get them back.

BANKER STAYS IN JAIL TO TAKE PUNISHMENT

Macon (Ga.) Defaulter Refuses Offer of Friends to Provide $25,000 Bail Bond.

MACON, Ga., Aug. 31 (AP).—Announcing he would take his punishment, T. Wallace Hawkes, president of the Merchants and Mechanics Bank here, has refused the offer by friends of $25,000 bond pending a grand jury investigation of embezzlement charges.

Hawkes, who was connected with the bank for more than twenty years, admitted the embezzlement of $91,000 over many years. The money was taken in small amounts by manipulating accounts, he told bank examiners.

The bank is closed, with no possibility of reopening, according to Orville A. Park, an attorney for the Banking Department.

Though the shortage is said to be more than $91,000, Mr. Park said the actual loss would be only about $12,500. The defaulting president agreed to turn over all his property to make up as much of the shortage as possible.

WOULD DIVIDE WARWICK, N.Y.

Greenwood Lake Taxpayers Want Hamlet Made Independent.

Special to The New York Times.

GREENWOOD LAKE, N. Y., Aug. 31.—A majority of the members of Greenwood Lake District Taxpayers Association, have launched a movement to partition off Greenwood Lake hamlet from the town of Warwick and make it a separate town. There are many Summer homes around the lake.

A committee which studied the project reports that it will cost only about one-fifth to operate the proposed new town of what it costs to run Warwick. The proposed town would give Orange County twenty-one separate towns.

The proposed town embraces twenty-eight square miles of territory with an assessed valuation of $3,200,000, or one-quarter of the value of the present town of Warwick. The electors of Warwick must approve of the partitioning of the town.

HURRICANE SWEPT LINER FOR 6 HOURS

SEAS FOAMED ON DECK

The Red Star Liner Lapland arrived yesterday from Channel ports with 958 passengers after passing through the tail of the hurricane last Thursday when the wind reached a velocity of 109 miles followed by high seas which swept the foredeck for six hours but did not do any damage. Not a single passenger or member of the crew was injured and the Captain, H. Harvey, said not a rope yarn was carried away in the storm.

According to the log, the hurricane reached the Lapland at 3 P. M. Thursday, Aug. 28, when she was 1,200 miles east of Sandy Hook in latitude 41.10 north and longitude 47.30 west. The Captain said he could smell it in the air at noon that day. When it came with a shrieking down on the ship he reduced speed to four knots and the barometer fell half an inch to 28.73.

The maximum was reached between 4 and 5 o'clock and he altered the ship's course. As the wind abated the seas rose, Captain Harvey said. At 9:45 P. M. the Lapland passed out of the storm area and the barometer climbed 27 points in 22 minutes.

When the seas were sweeping over the fore deck about twenty young boys and girls donned their bathing suits and started to play about in the foaming water. The captain saw them from the bridge and shouted to them to get below and they obeyed.

Another passenger was Frederick Graham, the English actor, who has been a half century on the stage and returns to act in a new play for the Shuberts. He said when he was 20 he knew the rôle of Othello, though he never acted in Shakespearian plays.

ESCAPED HURRICANE AT SEA

Captain A. J. Schmidt, master of the Oscar II of the Scandinavian American Line, which arrived yesterday from Copenhagen via Oslo, was surprised to hear of the battering that the French liner Paris had received last Thursday in a hurricane.

Captain Schmidt looked up his log for that date, Aug. 28, and said that his ship was 300 miles from the position of the Paris. The sea was calm and the sun was shining, the captain said.

The Oscar II carried 684 passengers, among whom was Sven Larsen, dancer of the Chicago Civic Opera Company, who said he had been drilling six months with the Danish Navy, of which he is a reserve member.

CANNED MUSIC IN THEATRES

IS ART TO HAVE A TYRANT?

THO' the Robot can make no music of himself, he can and does arrest the efforts of those who can.

Though "music hath charms to soothe the savage breast, to soften rocks or bend a knotted oak," it has no power to appease the Robot of Canned Music. Only the theatre-going public can do that.

Hence the swift growth of the Music Defense League, formed to demand Living Music in the theatre.
